SENATOR SAM ERVIN

★ SAYS ★

WASHINGTON — Congress has before it the administration's proposed Civil Rights Act of 1967. The Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, of which I am chairman, has begun hearings to determine the nature, the scope and the effect of this measure upon the lives and liberties of the people.

It comes to the Senate in the wake of the country's worst race riots with urging that Congress must enact more so-called civil rights legislation or face the consequences. Such pleas were also made in 1964 when Congress was told repeatedly by the Justice Department that if it passed the 1964 Civil Rights Act, it would take controversy out of the streets and put it in the courts. In 1965 Congress was told the same thing. Congress yielded and legislated.

This time there appears to be less Congressional receptiveness to such arguments. If the mindless destruction of our cities has proven anything, it has demonstrated that lawlessness is not curbed by the passage of an annual package of civil rights proposals.

The country is finding out, too, that labels on a bill do not tell all. The label "civil rights" is not the only thing that comes with many of these measures. Often there are reams of federal controls in the form of federal regulations. Then a task force of strangers comes to the community to advise. Soon liberties become a little wilted. Sometimes liberties die when the penalties are invoked.

The truth is that most civil rights bills are based upon the premise that the federal government knows better than we how we should live and act. No better example of this can be found than the latest version of the federal "open housing" proposal. In three stages, Congress is asked to give the Department of Housing and Urban Development the power to control the sale and rental of private housing through junior appointees and employees with virtually unbridled administrative discretion. One can find ample cause for concern when he thinks of the "field day" this new bureaucracy would have in dealing with all the grievances that would come to it over the sale and rental of private homes and apartments.

A few years ago a citizen would have discounted such a proposal as "a bad dream" that required no argument that it violated the First, Fourth, Fifth, Ninth and Tenth Amendments, that it was oppressive, or that it was unworkable in a free society. Yet, today the subcommittee is considering this very proposal and finding that advocates are confused on how it may work. It should be stated that even the fondest expectations by "open housing" advocates do not take into consideration the fact that such a bill would not meet the needs of slum dwellers and would fan the flames of frustration in those who are deluded about its effect and purpose.

In future columns, I expect to discuss other titles of the proposed 1967 Civil Rights Act, and my concerns about its provisions relating to the selection of members of state jury panels and the expansion of powers by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, both of which affect the basic liberties of our people.

H. M. MCKENZIE SBA Office Is Recognized

The Charlotte office of the Small Business Administration today was named SBA's Regional Office of the Year at annual awards ceremonies in Washington, D. C.

Small Business Administrator Bernard L. Boutin presented a plaque to Regional Director Howard M. McKenzie, "In recognition of exemplary performance in providing this Agency's services to small businessmen, and for promoting the economic well-being of the communities served by the regional office."

The Charlotte Regional Office provides small firms in the entire state of North Carolina with all of SBA's services including management and contracting assistance, business, disaster, economic opportunity and local development loans.

The office has been particularly effective in assisting with the economic development of North Carolina through the SBA's local development company program. Under the program SBA provides financing to corporations organized to acquire land to build or modernize plants and to purchase machinery and equipment. Over 90 of these loans have been approved by the Charlotte office totaling more than $15.6 million. As a result 7,500 new jobs have been created in the State.

The Charlotte office was selected for the honor from 62 SBA regional offices located in major cities throughout the Nation. J. H. Conger, Jr., of Edenton is a member of the Regional Advisory Board.

How To Get Her Back
Flenn: My wife has been at her mother's three weeks now and keeps prolonging her visit. I need her at home, but she pays no attention when I suggest that she return.
Flam: Get one of the neighbors to suggest she'd better do it, my boy.

Albemarle Museum Displays Paper Money

North Carolina paper money is the topic of a new exhibit which will run from July through September at the Museum of the Albemarle, three miles south of Elizabeth City.

Included in the exhibit are colonial North Carolina bills; State charter bank notes; the State fractional bills that were issued to support the public school system during the 19th century; Confederate bills and North Carolina Confederate bills; National Bank notes; and county bills from the depression of the 1930's when several North Carolina counties issued bills based on anticipated tax revenue to support the local economy.

The bills are mounted on light-colored panels for easy viewing and each note is amply described as to date of issue, type of bills, and identifications of engravings and signatures.

North Carolina Confederate bills form the largest part of the new exhibit. David Cox, Jr., of Hertford, whose money collection forms the basis of the display, has lent the Museum representative bills from each year of the Civil War, county and town issues from the Albemarle area, and bills with particularly interesting engravings and histories. Included in the exhibit are a lithographic proof stone and copper engraving plate which explain the printing process and bills that illustrate the scarcity of paper in the South during the war years. These items are on loan to the Museum of the Albemarle from the Confederate Museum in Richmond, Va.

Of particular interest to residents of the Albemarle area and to numismatists are four National Bank notes given to the Museum by the First and Citizens National Bank of Elizabeth City. These bills illustrate the period from the 1890's to the 1930's when the names of the National Banks were printed on the bills.

The public is invited to view this exhibit and compare the medium of exchange used years ago in North Carolina with that of today.

The Museum of the Albemarle is open Monday through Friday from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M., Wednesday night 7 to 9 o'clock and Sunday afternoons 2 to 5 o'clock.

FICKLE LOVER

Gentle wind, how do you go? Do you go where the mornings glow?
Precious wind, come pamper my skin, I'll praise you and live in sin.
Carefree wind, how soft you blow. Can you be as soft as the snow?

Dancing wind, how graceful you be. Please come and dance with me.
Loving wind, come hold me tight, Caress and kiss me throughout the night.
Fickle wind, waving goodbye, How softly you left and made me cry.

—Garry Ervin.
