

Eliminating Medical Fraud

FORT LEE, Va. — Phase one of a new computerized enrollment system to record and verify the eligibility for military health and medical care benefits of all active duty and retired military personnel, their dependents and survivors, is underway.

The system, the Defense Enrollment - Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS), is being introduced initially in selected areas of southwestern Virginia and northeastern North Carolina through April 1980. Some 400,000 persons in these areas will be enrolled.

Presently, random spot checks are being made of dependents and service members in the Virginia and North Carolina areas to verify eligibility for health care. These checks are made on those requesting medical care of any kind, or on those who pick up prescriptions at military or Public Health Service facilities.

If a person's eligibility for medical care is verified by DEERS, no further action of the individual will be required. If it is not verified, he or she will be directed to report to the appropriate military personnel office to enroll in the DEERS system.

No one will be turned away or denied medical care for no being enrolled. But those who later prove ineligible for health care, will be billed for any care they may have received for which they were not entitled.

Active duty and retired personnel are automatically enrolled in DEERS by their organizational respective service. Dependents of active duty and retired members and eligible survivors of deceased members must apply for enrollment directly or through their sponsor in order to be included in the DEERS data bank.

Anyone now eligible for medical care through the military services who has not enrolled in the DEERS program must call Fort Lee's DEERS project office (1-804-734-2296) for enrollment forms.

The DEERS is aimed at improving the management and administration of the military health care system by eliminating waste and fraud. By 1982, more than nine million people are expected to be enrolled in DEERS, and will be certified and entered into the computerized data bank which will track their eligibility in the future.
