

ECSU Grad Center Opens

"Today, we mark a significant milestone in the rich and proud history of Elizabeth City State and, in so doing, we signal a new era for northeastern North Carolina," stated Gov. James B. Hunt, Jr., as he addressed the formal opening of the Graduate and Continuing Education Center at ECSU.

He added, "This is where continued strengthening of our educational system and a commitment to a dynamic and diversified economy can bring about a better life for so many people."

The initial graduate programs in special education, early childhood education, and vocational and occupational education "go to the very heart of the needs of this region," Hunt stressed.

He joined Dr. William C. Friday, President of the University of North Carolina system, in paying tribute to members of the UNC Board of Governors and General Administration; Dr. Kermit E. White, Chairman of the ECSU Board of Trustees; Chancellor Marion D. Thorpe; and others for their "progressive educational leadership."

President Friday noted that "History will record this date as a turning point in the life, growth, development and enhancement of Elizabeth City State University."

Friday, took the historic occasion to strongly stress that "The underlying principal that has sustained this and all Board actions, policies and decisions has been that integration and other educational and social objectives are realized through strong institutions, and that neither integration nor any other worthy educational or social purpose is advanced through measures that weaken and distort individual institutions, whatever their historical, racial identifiability."

Forty-seven students are currently enrolled in graduate courses at ECSU, with UNC-Chapel Hill, East Carolina and N. C. State Universities providing visiting professors. Construction of the $2-million graduate center for the program is to begin in early 1981. Completion of the center is targeted for mid-1982, enabling ECSU to take full responsibility for its own graduate degree program.
