Thirtieth Season
Opens June 19

Horn in the West, a colorful, rugged story of the westward movement in America will come to life for the 30th consecutive season here beginning June 19.

1981 is a three-way anniversary for the show. While the Horn, the nation's third oldest outdoor drama, is celebrating 30 years of continuous production, two members of the cast also mark their 30th year of service to the show. They are Glenn Causey of Arlington, Virginia, and Charles Elledge of Dallas, N. C. Glenn Causey began his tenure with the Horn as the show's square dance caller and later played the Reverend Samuel Doaks. Causey captured the Boone role during the fourth year of the show and has held it ever since. His booming voice and six-foot-four-inch stature fit the popular but not accurate conception of the famous Indian fighter and backwoodsman. Causey, in the off season, serves as guidance counselor in the Arlington, Virginia, school system. Unlike most public school employees, Causey does not know what a summer vacation is, since for the past 30 seasons he has driven some 470 miles and 200 years back into the pages of history to play the immortal Daniel Boone.

Probably the best-loved character in the Horn is that of the rugged, jovial Baptist minister Isaiah Sims. The lovable Preacher Sims has been portrayed for the past 27 seasons by Charles Elledge. The Horn's author, Kermit Hunter, created, the role with Elledge in mind. Before assuming the role of Sims, Elledge spent two seasons as settler leader Amos Howard and one miserable season as Daniel Boone. Says six-foot-five, 250-pound Elledge of that memorable stint as Boone, "It took a form-fitted corset and two stage hands to prepare me for the nightly ordeals..." During his 30 summers in Boone, a lot has happened to Charlie. Once he was bitten by a black widow spider, and during another season, he underwent painful surgery. Finally in 1977, the day before rehearsals began, his doctor discovered throat cancer. But, as they say, the show must go on, and Elledge has done just that for the past 30 years.

The opening night festivities will be highlighted by a "Home-cooked meal" on the grounds which will begin at 6 P. M. The meal is being sponsored by the Kiwanis Club of Boone and will be catered by the renowned Dan'l Boone Inn. Dinner tickets are $5 for adults and $3 for children and may be purchased in advance or at meal time at the Horn. Charles Elledge sums up quite well the philosophy of the actors and actresses and other folks who have been with the Horn for these 30 years. "When you start assessing the work of those who have been in the show, it's hard to find anyone who didn't have the show's interests at heart, and who wasn't proud of the part he had to play in it." Mountain folks and old Dan'l himself were and are like that.

The exciting outdoor saga unveils nightly except Monday at 8:30 P. M., June 19 through August 15 in the beautiful Daniel Boone Amphitheatre, seating 1,700. Reserved seats are front center and cost $6; all other seats are $5. Children's tickets are half price. Special rates are available for senior citizens, military, camps, and groups of more than 10. Write Horn, Box 295, Boone, N. C. 28607 or call 704-264-2120 for reservations or information.
