Jaw Injuries
Are Dangerous

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. V. — Ever see a person who appears to have an offset jaw?

A forgotten childhood accident may have caused it.

Orthodontists from throughout the state were reminded here that a seemingly simple childhood mishap can fracture small bones in the joint where the jaw joins the skull.

If undetected, it can result in one side of the lower jaw growing more than the other.

This can shift the bite to one side. Persons learn to adapt to uneven growth while chewing, but appear lopsided when the jaws are at rest.

Modern orthodontic and oral surgery techniques can repair damage to the jaws and joints — or even remodel an incorrect one.

Parents should be alert to a child's complaining of soreness or stiffness in their cheeks or jaws after a fall, bike wreck or first fight.

If the pain persists, it would be wise to consult an orthodontist or oral surgeon.

Members of the West Virginia Society of Orthodontists, attending their annual scientific meeting here, have at least years of orthodontic specialty training after completing four years of dental school.
