Protecting Against Football Injuries

It's that time of year again, the annual fall rites of the American male. The game of running, jumping, tackling, falling, bruises, cuts, sprains, pains - collectively known as football - is played everywhere by everybody from "peewees" to "pros".

While most of the injuries aren't serious there are some things you can do to help protect yourself and make your participation in the game more enjoyable.

A thorough physical examination is a must before preparing to go out for football to make sure there is no physical condition that could prove harmful. This is to protect your health.

Water should always be available during these sessions because it is necessary to replace the body fluids lost through sweating. Salt is also important to replace, either through salt tablets or by salting food heavily during meals.

One of the most important reasons these precautions are necessary is to prevent heat stroke which can be extremely dangerous. Heat stroke occurs when the body's cooling mechanism, the evaporation of sweat from the skin, ceases to function. When this occurs, the body temperature can rise as much as 7.4 degrees (from a normal of 98.6 to 106) in twenty minutes and can cause kidney, liver, or brain damage.
