

Governor Presented NC Poultry Gifts

RALEIGH — The First Family of North Carolina will be enjoying Tar Heel grown and processed poultry food products during the Christmas and New Year holidays.

The North Carolina poultry industry presented Gov. James B. Hunt and his family an array of poultry food gifts for the holiday season during a presentation at the Governor's Mansion in Raleigh. Among the bounty was gift packs of broilers, eggs, duckling and a festively packaged turkey bearing the greeting, "Happy Holidays, Mr. Governor!"

Ed Woodhouse, executive director of the N. C. Poultry Federation, pointed out to Mrs. Carolyn Hunt, the state's First Lady, that North Carolina probably has a greater variety of poultry food products grown and processed in the state than any other state in the nation. In addition to chickens, turkeys and eggs, North Carolina also produces quail and duckling.

Program Is Adopted

"An acceptable program for the elderly was developed and adopted at the White House Conference on Aging held recently in Washington, D.C., even though there was an apparent structuring of the conference to assure adoption of President Reagan's social and economic policies," said Ernest B. Messer, assistant secretary of the Division of Aging of the North Carolina Department of Human Resources. Messer headed the 69 North Carolina delegates and observers that attended.

More than 600 resolutions were introduced and passed. Messer felt the most important happening in the conference was the support by the delegates for the Social Security System as it is now constituted with no reductions in benefits. The delegates felt reform should enhance, rather than diminish protection.

Messer said the administration had appointed 400 extra delegates about three weeks before the conference began and they played leading roles in introducing the President's program and receiving recognition for this. The committee chairmen, appointed by the administration, also made it difficult for others to introduce resolutions, he commented. Only a small number of the delegates was assigned to the committees they requested, according to Messer.

However, he felt there were several significant recommendations passed at the Conference. One was the provision that governmental agencies and private enterprises make available part-time jobs for senior citizens and, if necessary, training programs should be structured to qualify them for these jobs.

Members of the conference decided that volunteer services by senior citizens should be encouraged and that tax laws be changed to permit volunteers to deduct expenses from income tax.

It was also recommended that in-home services such as home health care and adult day care be expanded and that regulations under medicare and medicaid be changed to permit reimbursement for these services. It was the thinking of the council that it would be more economic to encourage older citizens to request care so they may stay at home. Present laws encourage the aging to go into institutions.

Forced retirement was abolished. The old laws require retirement at a specific age. The council felt this should be abolished and that a law prohibiting age discrimination be rigidly enforced.

There was a number of resolutions proposing to make housing and transportation both public and private more readily available to the elderly.

USING WOOD ASHES: With the increase of burning wood for home heating there has also been an increase in the production of ashes. There is good use for that pile of ashes building up at the back of the house.

Wood ashes can be beneficial to lawns, gardens and plant growth beds. They contain potassium or potash, which is an essential plant nutrient, and they have some of the same influence as lime. In other words, they can help to raise the pH of the soil. There are no known toxic constituents in wood ashes that will damage plants if used at appropriate rates.

The nutrient and liming capability of wood ashes varies slightly according to the type of wood burned. A general rule is to use no more than one bushel of ashes per 1,000 square feet every other year.

Ideally, the ashes should be broadcast on the surface and incorporated into the soil. Make sure you remove nails and other objects that might have been attached to scrap wood.

As a precaution, it would be best to have your soil tested every two years if you plan to apply ashes on a continuing basis.
