

TOY Regional Finalist To Be Chosen

In just a few weeks, the eight regional finalist competing for the 1982-83 N.C. Teacher of the Year (TOY) will be named. The nominees will be selected by mid-January from competitors representing most of the local school systems.

A screening committee in each of the eight regional education centers is now in the process of interviewing local winners and evaluating notebooks. Once the regional finalists are named, a selection committee appointed by the Office of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction will review their scrapbooks, interview them, and recommend the three top state finalists. An observation team will then visit the finalists at their schools to determine the winner.

The 1982-83 TOY will be presented to the State Board at its April meeting. The teacher selected will have no classroom duties during the year's reign and will be entered in national competition.

"Finding the best classroom teacher in North Carolina would be an impossible task," State Superintendent Craig Phillips explained. "We attempt to find one superior representative of the finest in the teaching profession who will represent good teachers everywhere," he said.

Since 1970, when North Carolina first participated in the teacher of the year program, the state has produced four national finalists and two national winners. The national event is jointly sponsored by the Council of Chief State School Officers, Encyclopedia Britannica, and Good Housekeeping magazine.

The present teacher of the year is Dr. Penny Smith, a humanities teacher at Asheboro High School, who began her term July 1.

Four Attend Council Convention

Lisa Brothers, Denise Stallings, Johnathan Brickhouse and advisor, Mrs. Shirley Perry of Edenton-Chowan Alternative School attended the North Carolina Association of Student Councils Convention at John T. Hoggard High School in Wilmington, November 14-16. The students attended leadership workshops conducted by Student Council leaders that dealt with school spirit and problems common to Student Council. Seminars focusing on teenage concerns such as alcohol and drug abuse, sexuality, the draft, and public speaking were conducted by adult community leaders. The student delegates were chosen to represent their schools on the basis of their leadership potential and involvement in Student Council. Highlights of the convention included a keynote address at the opening session by Terry Giroux, Director of Student Activities, National Association of Student Councils; a banquet on Sunday night featured Congressman Charles Rose of the 7th District as guest speaker; and the election of new State Association officers on Monday.
