

Annual Canadian Day To Be Celebrated

RALEIGH — The red maple leaf will be waving prominently across North Carolina February 15 through March 31 welcoming Canadian visitors to the Tar Heel state during the second annual Canadian Days celebration.

Some 15 communities ranging from Asheville and Hickory in the west to the Outer Banks, Carteret County and the South Brunswick Islands on the North Carolina coast will be participating in this year's celebration.

During the six-week period Canadian visitors will receive some special hospitality in the form of reduced rates for accommodations, meals and other activities such as golf.

"North Carolina has long been a favorite travel destination of Canadians," said Governor James B. Hunt, Jr. in proclaiming the "Canadian Days" celebration. "We feel this is a way to say thank you to our Canadian friends for being such good neighbors. We hope that by setting aside this period, more attention will be called to North Carolina for our Canadian friends."

The first "Canadian Days" celebration in 1981 included participation by Pinehurst, Carteret County and Fayetteville. Several thousand Canadians responded to a state advertising campaign concerning the celebration.

With the expanded participation this year, it is expected to bring even more Canadians to North Carolina during one of their favorite times for traveling.

"During this celebration, I encourage North Carolinians to display the Canadian flag prominently as a way of saying welcome to our Canadian friends," Hunt continued. "They have on many occasions shown the true spirit of neighborliness. This is a time when we can, in some small way, say thank you for what you have done."

There is a growing link between North Carolina and Canada industrially and a delegation from New Brunswick province representing Northern Telecom was on hand for the proclamation ceremony in the Governor's office. Northern Telecom has facilities in North Carolina's Research Triangle Park.

Among the participating communities this year are Asheville, Charlotte, Fayetteville, Greensboro, Hickory, High Point, The Sandhills, Winston-Salem, Raleigh, New Bern, Carteret County, South Brunswick Islands, Rocky Mount and the Outer Banks.

N.C. Poultry Queen To Travel State

North Carolina's "queen industry...poultry food products...recently crowned a new "Royal" ambassador to travel across the state next year as a goodwill representative of the state's largest and most dynamic food industry. Miss Kim Weeks of Wilmington, was chosen from a field of nine contestants at a recent pageant in Rose Hill, North Carolina to serve as 1982 North Carolina Poultry Queen.

Miss Weeks, the daughter of Emily Green of Long Beach and David Weeks of Lake Wales, Fla., is a sophomore at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington where she is pursuing a major in art. She will receive a scholarship from the state's poultry industry to help further her educational goals.

The N. C. Poultry Federation will be scheduling many of the queen's appearances according to Ed Woodhouse, executive director. The Poultry Queen will be helping to educate North Carolina's citizens about the size and importance of the poultry food industry to the economic well-being of the state. Woodhouse noted that during 1980 the poultry farm income exceeded $787-million — quite a story for the new poultry queen to tell.

Effective Erosion Solutions

Erosion is no stranger to the North Carolina estuarine shoreline. Typical erosion rates average one to two feet per year. For property owners in this coastal area, there are few options in dealing with this normal and continuing process. One option that can sometimes be an effective and relatively economical solution is a bulkhead.

A bulkhead is a vertical wall constructed to prevent erosion of high ground upland of the wall. There are several designs of bulkheads, each with its own advantages and disadvantages. UNC Sea Grant's new publication, "A Homeowners Guide to Estuarine Bulkheads," discusses these various aspects in addition to common construction problems and design considerations to look for when buying a bulkhead. Written by Spencer M. Rogers, Jr., Sea Grant's coastal engineering specialist, this guide includes a glossary and sources of additional information for homeowners new to estuarine bulkheads. For a copy of this publication, write Sea Grant, Box 5001, Raleigh, N.C. 27650-5001. As for publication number UNC-SG-81-11.
