Holmes Students Seeking New Projects

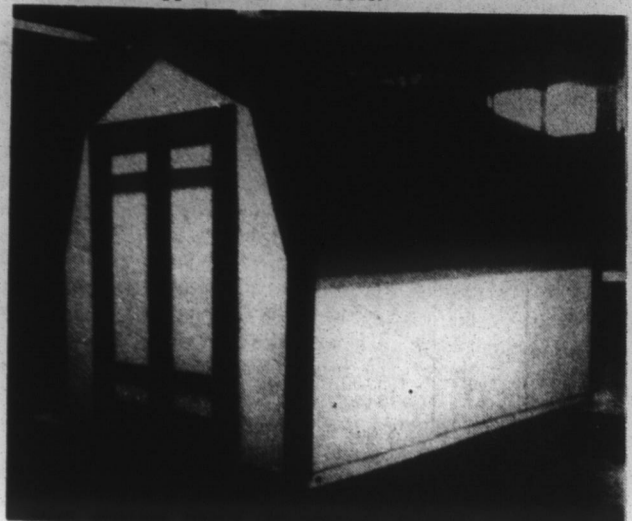

In these inflationary times, there is still a way to beat the high cost of construction. Let John A. Holmes High School students do the job.

Among the high school's vocational courses which give students practical, hands-on training and experience are those in construction. Receiving instruction and supervision from Linwood Lewis, interested students may enroll in Construction I, II, III (advanced). Students completing all courses can learn theory and attain skills which enable them to enter the job market immediately or which will provide a strong background for further technical training.

According to Mr. Lewis, students would like more opportunities to build projects of a permanent nature, as opposed to small construction projects which they build in the school's shop. Because of limited funds, these projects, once completed, generally are dismantled and the materials reused for another construction design.

Mr. Lewis pointed out that labor costs frequently equal or surpass that of building materials in a construction project. He stated that he and the students would welcome the opportunity for construction projects from interested citizens in the community.

For more information, contact Mr. Lewis at John A. Holmes High School, 482-8426.

THE HOUSE THAT STUDENTS BUILT — The above pictured Dutch Colonial style utility storage barn was recently constructed for John Santana by John A. Holmes High School students. The students, currently enrolled in the school's vocational program. Construction I, II, or III (Advanced), completed the community project in a month's time. Construction I students (Bottom photo) proudly stand beside the completed structure which gave them an opportunity to receive hands-on experience in a permanent structure.
