

EVENTS — Historic riverside New Bern will be set abuzz next month when hundreds of visitors arrive to welcome spring with the simultaneous celebration of two gala events. More than 25 private homes, including this Coor - Bishop House, gardens and historic landmarks of North Carolina's last colonial capital and first state capital will be opened to the public for the Spring Historic Homes and Gardens Tour on April 2 and 3. Complementing the yearly event will be the 10th annual Gardeners' Sunday at Tryon Palace on April 4.

Application Deadline Is May 1st For The College Transfer Program At COA

Area high school graduates who plan to enroll in a college transfer program at College of The Albemarle this fall may apply for the Alexandra K. Boada Citizenship Award, according to Barbar Riccardo, foreign language instructor. The application deadline is May 1.

The competitive scholarship is available to graduates from high schools in the seven counties served by the college. Present scholarship holders who are returning to COA may reapply, Mrs. Riccardo said.

The award provides funds for in-state tuition, fees, and limited book expenses for one academic year. High school students must rank in the upper half of their graduating class.

Other criteria for eligibility requires applicants to submit a short history of present and past community, school, and/or church activities; two letters of reference; and a brief essay.

The essay requirement lists two optional topics, "Improving Citizenship Through a Community College Education," or "How College of The Albemarle Will Help Me Achieve My Goals in Life." It must contain a minimum of 250 words.

Interested students may obtain detailed information by contacting Mrs. Riccardo at the college. The selection of a recipient for the award will be made and announced during the month of May.

AQUACULTURE
By Johnny Foster
UNC Sea Grant

How many of you have enjoyed setting up an aquarium? Did you stock it with fish and feed them? Did you monitor the water quality? Perhaps, you even had some baby fish born in your aquarium. If you have done these things, then you are an aquaculturist.

Aquaculture? It is simply the growing of anything in water. Perhaps hobbyists would prefer to be called water gardeners. Not many vegetable gardeners call themselves "horticulturists."

The reasons people enjoy gardening in soil or in water are similar. Most people enjoy producing something. We are particularly attracted to producing something that tastes good, saves money, provides recreation and looks attractive. In fact water gardening and land gardening complement each other nicely. Plants benefit from the water used for irrigation and the fish wastes used for fertilizer. A pond can be fertilized from runoff from the garden. A greenhouse can use a pool of water to stabilize temperatures and both plants and fish can be grown in it.

Water gardening can take many different forms. I would recommend starting simple until you gain some experience. Raising fish in cages may be the simplest way to get started. A one-cubic-yard cage that you make yourself can be stocked with 200 to 250 fingerling fish. The cages can be placed in a stream or pond and supplied with commercial fish feed. Excellent quality fish, about one pound each, can be harvested after one season.

A group of aquaculture researchers at the Organic Gardening and Farming Research Center in Pennsylvania have developed a simple, efficient system for growing one hundred pounds of fish per year in a small, plastic-lined steel pool. Their system, which we have demonstrated at our lab, uses recycled 55-gallon drums for waste-settling tanks. A very small electric pump circulates water over a rotating disk biofilter. The filter also keeps plenty of oxygen in the water. To extend the growing season, an inexpensive plastic dome can be installed. The center also offers plans for a nice, durable cage and a small fish hatchery. For a complete description of their work and plans, write the center at the address listed below.

A small pond is an excellent site for a water garden. As more is learned about the natural system, management can enable more species to be cultured. Watercress, cattails, wild rice, frogs, crayfish, snapping turtles, ducks, catfish, bass, bream, perch, tilapia, eels, carp and prawns are all delicious to eat and can be raised in freshwater ponds. Brackish water is ideal for striped bass, mullet, catfish and eels, and for shedding blue crabs. Salt water is excellent for growing clams, oysters, scallops and many fish. Contact me for information about obtaining fingerlings.

As you gain more experience and learn more about the aquatic ecosystem, more species can be managed. It is exciting to observe how each component of nature has a direct influence upon every other component. Water gardening can develop into an interesting and productive hobby. Would you like to consider taking your aquarium aquaculture into the backyard?

due to their analysis of Andrews' lack of attention for a possible constituency.

Only in Wake County does Andrews hold a decisive advantage with state employees and a more liberal electorate. But there are a lot of conservatives in Wake County and a lot of closet independent voters - if not Republicans.

One other thing, the Congressional Club can be expected to draw attention to discrepancies in Andrews' office expenditures and campaign financing that were revealed but not hammered upon in 1980.

New Chemistry Teacher At COA

David Fraser has been employed to teach chemistry at College of The Albemarle, according to an announcement this week by Norman L. Norfleet, dean of instruction. Fraser, a native of Chapel Hill, will instruct Chemistry III and General Physics III during the Spring Quarter, Norfleet said.

He earned his bachelor's degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and a master's degree in chemistry from the University of Texas in Austin. During his undergraduate and graduate studies, he worked as a chemistry laboratory technician and a teaching assistant.

Prior to his employment by COA, Fraser was employed as a research assistant with the Drug Dynamics Institute of the School of Pharmacy at UT.
