Views On Dental Health

Richard N. Hines, Jr. D.D.S. Fellow of The Academy of General Dentistry

Overcoming Anxiety?

There are a lot of people who will not fly because they have an extreme anxiety or fear of flying. Let's face it, a lot of people do not get needed dental care because they too, have anxiety about the dental chair. It is estimated that 10 to 12 million people won't go to the dentist for necessary dental work strictly because of this anxiety.

When you think about it, the concept is ludicrous. Dental care in today's modern dental office is virtually without real pain. If you want some REAL pain, experience a toothache from a root abscess and DON'T go to a dentist for relief. That's not anxiety. That's pain.

Regular dental care will PREVENT pain by keeping your mouth healthy. NOT going to the dentist will set you up - not for anxiety - but for a possible tooth loss accompanied by the pain you could have avoided in the first place. If you have any anxiety, talk to your dentist about it and everything will be done to make sure you're comfortable. Don't neglect needed dental care because of unwarranted anxiety.

INSIGHT INTO EYESIGHT

DR. A. F. DOWNUM, JR.
OPTOMETRIST

Concave Or Contact Lenses?

Do you know why your glasses are shaped the way they are? If the lens curves inward, this is a concave lens. It pushes the focused rays of light backward to the retina to correct for near-sightedness. If you didn't have those glasses, your eyes would be focusing too soon, causing your vision to blur. If the lens curves outward, it's a convex lens. This is designed to push the focused rays of light forward to the retina, correcting for far-sightedness. Without these glasses, your eyes would focus too late also causing blurred vision. For people with astigmatism (two points of focus instead of one), the lens will be either concave or convex, depending on the kind of astigmatism. It can be either farsighted or near-sighted. If the problem is presbyopia (the inability to use the near-focusing muscles), the lens will be convex, just as it is for the farsighted person. Whatever the shape of lens needed, it has to be carefully prescribed to give good results.
