INSIGHT INTO EYESIGHT

CATARACTS AND HOPE

For the great majority of people, having a cataract does not mean they will become blind. The record for cataract surgery is one of the best in medicine. Vision is restored in 95 per cent of all cases. This is true for elderly patients, too, if their general health is good.

People who have a cataract in one or both eyes find their vision blurred. This is caused by a cloudiness or opacity of the lens of the eye. There is not enough light for a clear image.

When the cataract is removed, so is the lens. This means a substitute lens must be used to see again. Sometimes the eye surgeon will implant a substitute lens in the eye itself. But most people compensate for the loss of the eye's lens by wearing glasses or contact lenses.

Some people prefer contact lenses because they fit directly over the eye. They feel more comfortable wearing contacts rather than thick - lensed glasses. Other people prefer wearing glasses. Both do the job that's needed: they allow you to see clearly again.

GUM BOIL (ABSCESS)

An abscess (sometimes known as a gum boil) in the gum tissue can be a painful experience. It may result from an infection within the tooth itself which means the nerve is dying or has died. The breakdown products move in the path of least resistance through the bone and then through the gum.

The abscess could also be caused by a trapping of food or bacterial products in the gum space we call a "pocket" (an opening between the gum and the tooth) which is a symptom of periodontal disease. If the entrance to the pocket closes, tightly around an area of heavy breakdown, then the toxins accumulate and create pressure in the gum wall.

Again, you may have pain with the swelling. It will be painful, will not cure itself and will only get worse without treatment. Whatever the cause, you should call your dentist and tell him of your emergency. He will relieve your discomfort, determine the cause of the abscess and treat the tooth or gum pocket if the tooth is worth saving.
