Historic Restoration

With a grant to an historic restoration project in Jones County the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation has achieved another milestone in its role as the major general purpose foundation in North Carolina - it has made grants in every one of the state's one hundred counties.

The grant to support completion of restoration of the Foscoe Plantation House on Highway 17 between New Bern and Wilmington is the first made by the Winston-Salem based foundation in the small rural eastern county. Earlier grants have gone to projects in everyone of the other 99 Tar Heel counties.

The Reynolds Foundation was established in 1936 as a memorial to the youngest son of the tobacco manufacturing pioneer R. J. Reynolds. Since then 1,360 grants valued at $107,308,643 have been awarded to almost 700 recipient institutions and organizations.

Foundation grants have been awarded for every conceivable kind of activity important to the quality of life in the state. The North Carolina Museum of Art and the state zoo are typical major projects which have received seven figure grants but the list includes many smaller community projects from Ebbs Chapel on the Tennessee border to Ocracoke Island in the Outer Banks.

At the grants meeting this month when the Foscoe restoration project was approved other grants were approved for support of major grassroots organizing efforts in the state, for support of energy conservation efforts by small private colleges, for innovative community initiatives in the criminal justice area for health care delivery in rural areas of N.C. and dozens of other purposes.

Conference Held At E.C.U.

GREENVILLE - Solving the mathematical mysteries of waves crashing upon the shore and of the force of blood coursing through veins and arteries will be pondered during a June 22-26 conference at East Carolina University.

Between 75 and 100 internationally known researchers in the mathematical and physical sciences will be reporting on techniques to solve differential equations used to construct theoretical models of nonlinear waves.

This field of mathematics holds promise of practical application in any physical activity involving wave or oscillatory motion, including predicting of beach erosion, movement of weather systems, effects of blood circulatory problems, sound wave effects and others.

A lecture by Prof. Alan C. Newell of the University of Arizona, Tucson, will cover broad research - expository topics including nonlinear oscillators, wavetrains and methods used in their analysis; history of the soliton, solitons in physics; derivation of the canonical nonlinear evolution equations; inverse scattering theory and discussion of new directions. Newell also will conduct seminars.

Dr. Lokenath Debnath of the ECU Department of Mathematics, director of the conference on Nonlinear Waves and Integrable Systems, said special reference will be given to nonlinear partial differential equations with applications.

Participation is open to scholars already working at the research level in this field, Debnath said. The conference is being supported by the National Science Foundation and hosted by the ECU Department of Mathematics.

Debnath said proceedings of the conference are to be published in a research monograph, Nonlinear Waves, devoted to original research papers, research - expository and survey articles "with emphasis on unsolved problems and open questions in the mathematical theory and applications of nonlinear wave phenomena." Articles are being invited from researchers who may or may not participate in the conference, he said.
