INSIGHT INTO EYESIGHT

DR. A. F. DOWNUM, JR.
OPTOMETRIST

Johnny Won't Tell You

If your child has a vision problem, chances are he won't tell you or even be aware of it himself. More than likely he's been seeing the same way ever since he was born. Even if his vision is blurred, if he's seeing a double image, or only seeing well through one eye, he may be too young to be aware that anything is wrong. How does a parent explain to a child what his eyes should be seeing?

You may have noticed him rubbing his eyes more than normal or holding some toy or other object unusually close to his eyes. Or he may stumble over things he should have seen. You may think it's all part of growing up. You can't be sure unless you have your child's eyes examined. Many eye specialists recommend that a child's eyes be examined shortly after birth and again by the time he is four years old. After that, he should have yearly eye examinations as part of his annual health checkup.

If your child hasn't had an eye examination recently, maybe he should. Especially if you think there may be a vision problem.

Views On Dental Health

Dental Disease Not Inherited

We can break the chain of tooth decay. Today, dental disease is totally preventable. Bad teeth may "run in the family", but there is just no hereditary excuse for cavities, pyorrhea and crooked teeth. What we do pass down from generation to generation are bacteria, eating habits, muscular patterns, attitudes toward oral cleanliness, etc.

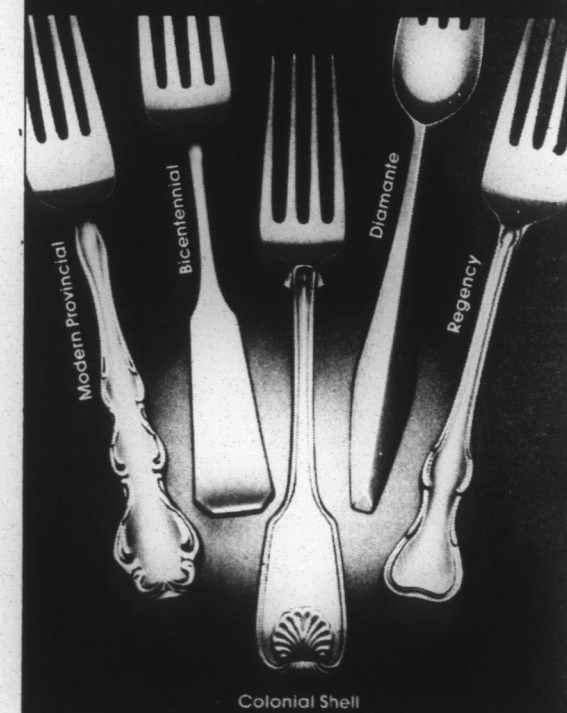

If grandmother had a history of dental problems, maybe it was because she nor her parents did not know how to take care of her teeth. If grandfather wore dentures, it may be because he lived at a time when teeth were extracted to "cure" all kinds of ailments from rheumatism to poor eyesight. But your own child has been born in an age of prevention. If he or she has eight cavities by age five, it will be because somebody has failed to do something. Today's preventive dental knowledge calls for a four-way effort to break the chain of decay through new approaches to bacterial control, diet, oral hygiene, and strengthening the resistance of teeth to decay. It will take time, caring and effort, but we can defeat dental decay in children if we really work at it.
