

White Attends Family Living Lecture

Ila Grey White, area home economics agent, of Hertford, attended the Eloise S. Cofer Family Living Lecture series, Jane S. McKimmon Center in Raleigh, June 3. The overall conference theme was "Adolescents - What are They?"

The seminar was designed to help people understand adolescence, the many problems that face this age group and how to help teenagers deal with those problems.

Nancy Jo Reedy, a certified nurse midwife from Prentice Women's Hospital, Chicago, was the keynote speaker. Reedy not only is in private practice, she has raised four foster children, two of whom are now teenagers living at home.

Hour-long concurrent sessions also focused on teen sexuality, drugs and alcohol abuse, positive discipline, learning disabilities, teens and money and anorexia nervosa.

The lecture series concluded with a luncheon address "Stress and the Adolescent" by Dr. Joan Lipsitz, director, Center for Early Adolescence, Chapel Hill.

The annual event, which takes an in-depth look at current problems facing North Carolina families, is sponsored by the Home Economics Department of the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service. The Division of University Studies at N.C. State University and the N.C. Extension Homemakers Associations, Inc.

Statistics From Selective Service

The Selective Service System has released updated statistics showing the compliance rates for registration of young men both at the national and state level. These statistics include the total results of the grace period registration granted by President Reagan reflect registrations as of March 31, 1982.

At the national level, there is a 93 per cent compliance with registration for all age groups - men born in 1960, 61, 62, 63, and the first 3 months of 1964.

Montana leads the nation with a compliance rate of 97.5 per cent. At the median level are states like Texas and Indiana both at 91 per cent. California has the lowest compliance rate in the nation at 83.4 per cent. Other examples - New York 86 per cent, Ohio 95 per cent, Illinois 88 per cent, Florida 94 per cent.

North Carolina's young men have an 89.8 per cent compliance with Selective Service registration.

By law, young men are required to register with Selective Service as they reach their 18th birthday - either 30 days before or after it. The registration requirement applies to all men born in 1960 and later years. Failure to register is a felony, carrying a maximum penalty of $10,000 and - or five years in prison.

National Guard Triple Winners

DENVER - North Carolina was a triple winner of the 14th Annual Adjutants General Association awards program it was announced in ceremonies here recently.

The N.C. National Guard walked away with three first place awards and one honorable mention out of seven possible categories. Maj. Gen. William E. Ingram, State Adjutant General, accepted the "Minuteman Mike" statues, symbols of first place honors, from Maj. Gen. Donald E. Edwards, AGAUS Awards Chairman.

A total of 145 submissions were received from 44 states and territories. The submissions depict each state's National Guard community involvement and information programs.

North Carolina won first place in youth activity, community action, and recruiting and retention. Honorable mention was given to command information.

In last year's competition North Carolina won first place in the public information category. No state in the 14 year history of the program has carried off three first place awards before North Carolina did so.

In announcing the awards, General Edwards noted the difficulties faced by the panel of civilian and military judges in evaluating the entries. The high quality of the entries made the judging very hard. In addition, the number of states participating in the program increased by 19 over the previous year.

A 12 member board, chaired by Brig. Gen. Hubert M. Leonard of Thomasville, Deputy Adjutant General, organized the North Carolina entries. Representatives came from each major Army National Guard Command in North Carolina plus the North Carolina Air National Guard.

Information on innovative programs and creative design of the entries were keys to the success of North Carolina in the competition.
