

Around The Farms

A group of farmers and Extension workers from southeastern Virginia visited Chowan County vegetable farmers last week. Bob Guerber, extension chairman in Isle of Wright County, headed the group. Guerber said, "I knew farmers grew vegetables around Edenton, but I didn't know you grew such a large acreage and so many different vegetables crops."

The Albemarle Cooperative Association's sale facility was the next stop and Jack Parker and Gene Nixon were speakers. Parker said the local sale is doing better than most similar sales in North Carolina.

This year our cantaloupe variety test is with Jerry Byrum. Byrum told the Virginians that he grows squash, cabbage, Irish Potatoes, cantaloupes and watermelons.

The last stop was at the E.L. Hurdle Farm at Joppa. Growing cantaloupes on black plastic and trickle irrigated was the center of attention here.

We would like to thank our farmers who helped with the tour. Everybody seemed enthusiastic and willing to share their knowledge.

Murray L. Goodwin
Agricultural Extension Agent

At the Alvin Evans Farm we saw a new corn picker and hydro cooler. Evans also showed how he crated cantaloupes for selling on the Baltimore market.

The corn variety test on Carroll Bass Farm was observed. There are ten white varieties in the test. Currently we are harvesting this test, and Platinum Lady is one of the new varieties showing promise.

Sherlon Layton gave the history of Chowan Cooperative Produce Exchange and details of the operation. Layton's advise was, "Don't grow vegetables if you don't know how you are going to sell them."

Diamond Shamrock sponsored lunch and Toni Smith talked about using fungicides successfully.

After lunch we visited Miles Dunlowe and his strawberry patch. Dunlowe and Bill Jester talked about growing and marketing strawberries.

Bridesmaids were Ms. Ann Belch of Wilmington, N.C., aunt of the bride, and Mrs. Gay Smith of Edenton, sister-in-law of the groom. They wore gowns of pink fashioned like the maid of honor. The bridegroom's mother wore a formal gown of daphne rose. The front and back of the gown featured a cowl drape with matching, Venice lace. A full skirt completed the gown. Both mothers were presented a corsage of double pink carnations with ivy.
