Carolina Review

campaigned and won the YDC presidency in 1964, Jim Hunt was his campaign manager. The next year, Jim Hunt was the YDC president.

But the conversation in the Raleigh restaurant centered around Tom Gilmore and his meteoric rise in state-wide name recognition (and public approval) after his personal campaign against Amendment Number One—the four-year term for state legislators.

The Hunt official said his boss would stay neutral in a fight between Knox and Gilmore. A call to Gary Pearce, press secretary and administrative aide to the governor, confirmed that observation.

"They were all three involved in each other's various races at that time (in college and YDC)—just part of the same group. The three are very close, and obviously, in a race between the two, the governor would stay neutral," Pearce said.

Pearce did volunteer that Gilmore's recent activity was "a stroke of political genius...that impressed a lot of people."

Pearce, from an excellent vantage point for observing political genius, also confirmed that gubernatorial observations at this time are premature. "It's just at the beauty pageant stage now—to see who looks good," Pearce said.

Gilmore also maintains it's too early. "Right now, I'm more worried about what the Democrats do in 1982," he says.

Perhaps it is too early, but former Charlotte mayor Eddie Knox has been rounding up support for a year or more.

So Mr. Gilmore, are you going to run for governor in 1984?

"I will be truthful, some groups have been to see me recently...they want a new face and new leadership," Gilmore said a couple of weeks ago. He was talking, of course, about some of the current leading contenders and not his old friend Jim Hunt.

According to Gilmore, "the decision has not been made (about his race), but I will give it my upmost consideration."

"I do know this, people do care about good government," Gilmore continued, "and want someone who can unite this state." "The race is wide open—no one has picked up substantial support," he said.

But Mr. Gilmore, are you going to run in 1984?

"The people are looking for other options, that's why a number of people are encouraging me to run. If they think I'm the most qualified...it's very likely (I will run) if that support is there," Gilmore said.

ECU Science

Summer Camp

GREENVILLE—Approximately 60 East North Carolina children, aged five to eight years, participated in East Carolina University's annual Summer Science Day Camp in June.

Among participants was Seth Laughlin, of Edenton.

The camp, sponsored by the ECU Department of Science Education, was offered in two sessions, June 14 - 18 and June 21 - 25. Directors were Drs. Carolyn and Carol Hampton of the ECU science education faculty.

Camp activities featured high interest science projects and experiments designed to increase the participating children's awareness and knowledge of the environment. These included both laboratory sessions and out-of-doors field trips on and off campus.
