

The Carolina Review: Flip And Flop?

Flip and Flop... Democrats across the state have been having a high, old time with the Republican mush dribbling out of Washington, D.C., lately. Cuts here, increases there, and the highest federal budget deficit in the history of the nation are only part of the Republican problems. Most recently, the Republicans have been blessed with a $100 - billion tax increase, engineered by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kansas (who is married to a North Carolina native).

Smack dab in the middle of that tax increase (an increase that candidate Reagan said wouldn't happen), is a 100 per cent increase in the tobacco tax - from eight cents a pack to sixteen cents.

Best of all for state Democrats, both Republican Senators from North Carolina, John East and Jesse Helms, voted for the tax increase. Both senators asked their constituency to trust them to be doing the right thing, a trust they were never willing to give Robert Morgan when Morgan was trying to strike compromises in the Senate for future votes on tobacco.

Supporters of the senators, now nick - named "Flip" and "Flop" by some reporters in Raleigh, yelled "foul" at a recent full - page ad in the Raleigh News and Observer that called them the "tobacco - tax twins." The ad was placed by the Democratic party, supposedly without the knowledge of Gov. Jim Hunt. But a source inside the administration now admits that while the governor did not conceive the ad, he did "approve it" before publication.

Sens. East and Helms have now backed off and say they can't vote for the tobacco tax as it now stands.

That doesn't really matter. The image of Republican leadership in Washington (including East and Helms) seems to be taking a real beating throughout the state. Democratic observers insist that state Tarheels are seeing through what are called "smokescreens" being thrown up - the school prayer amendment, the abortion amendment, and a balanced budget amendment (at the same time the administration is offering a deficit that could reach $150 billion).

To add fuel to the speculation about the perceived Washington image problems are the timid efforts by local Republican candidates to distance themselves from Washington - at least on the tobacco tax.

Last week, local Wake County Democrats called a news conference to point out the Republican jumble in Washington. No doubt, most

North Carolina Democrats are having a field day over the Republican problems.

Not So Lucky... Democrats in the 12th House District are not so lucky. They are saddled with a Democratic candidate for state House that has been charged with conspiracy charges of arson and, more recently, bribery in the Color investigation.

Incumbent Bladen County Rep. Ron Taylor is further faced with a civil court suit charging that he misrepresented and sold used farm equipment as new equipment through the financially - troubled Taylor Manufacturing Company.

Taylor, under cash bonds approaching $100,000, has sold his home and moved in with his parents - who themselves have filed for personal bankruptcy.

Understandably, Democrats in the district are trying to get Taylor to remove himself from the November ballot. State party chairman, Russell Walker, last week called publicly for Taylor to quit.

Taylor responded that Walker "doesn't tell him" what to do. And who can blame Taylor? To quit now could be construed as an admission of guilt. His candidacy might not be too good for the party, but a resignation might not look too good for his court case (s).

Actually, all of the concern might be for naught. Latest rumor tid - bits out of Bladen County (and Raleigh) suggest Taylor won't get past his first trial on the arson charges - which begins August 23rd.

Two Attend Convention

Mrs. Ruth H. Frinks, President of the Fannie A. Parker Woman's Club and Mrs. Annie C. Blair, Chairman of the Arts and Crafts Committee, attended the National Association of Colored Women's Club Convention in Anchorage, Alaska last week.

More than 500 members of the association met for their 86th annual convention - the first all-Black, all-women convention in the history of the city.

The convention was presided over by Mrs. Otelia Champion of East Chicago, Ind., who led the group in launching a drive to eliminate illiteracy before 1990. While the fight against illiteracy is the group's main goal for the 1980s, they will continue to champion causes such as battered women, further education for adult women, needs of senior citizens and child abuse.

The delegates were from more than 40 states and meeting with them were 44 members of the National
