Couple Teaches Own Children

A federal judge's ruling that a Tyrrell County couple can continue teaching their own children could open the door to tragedy for a lot of children, Loretta Martin, president of the N.C. Association of Educators, has said.

Mrs. Martin said Judge Franklin T. Dupree's decision that North Carolina's compulsory attendance law is unconstitutional "is shocking, even though the judge attempted to confine it to the one case before him."

She said the reality is that anyone professing strong beliefs will now be encouraged to remove their children from a traditional school setting, whether that setting be a public or a private school.

"That means innocent children will suffer, for it should be readily apparent that parents, busy with the task of making a living, can't hope to provide a full education for their children, no matter what curriculum guide they have purchased," she said.

She said she is appalled that Judge Dupree, after viewing the Alpha Omega Christian Curriculum the Tyrrell County couple had purchased "would conclude it seems to offer instruction in the basic subjects."

She said the NCAE feels the state owes to all its citizens certain basic protections and that a chance at a good formal education is one of these protections.

"Judge Dupree has certainly shown us that we need to petition the General Assembly to deal with this matter, and I hope that our State Board of Education will immediately move to reassert the state's obligation to all its children," Mrs. Martin said.

She said NCAE fought the "deregulation" of the non-public schools in 1979 when the General Assembly passed legislation removing non-public schools from state supervisory authority, and she said the Tyrrell County decision "shows the Association was eminently right in its stand."

Mrs. Martin said NCAE doesn't contend all children must attend a public school, but she said the state has an obligation to protect children from those who would deny them the opportunity of appropriate education.

MOVIES AND BOOKS ON VIDEO DISCS

A single book with 15,000 pages or a movie on a record? Modern science is making these things happen through the use of video technology.

The disc type still video recorder developed by Matsushita can record up to 15,000 still images on a single disc. The still video recorder can literally store books of information on a single disc.

Any one of the 15,000 images can be shown in less than a half second. The disc-type still video recorder may some day replace telephone books, shopping catalogs and even conventional business storage systems. The bulky file cabinet of today may be reduced to a single disc.

Kindness has never yet done anyone serious harm.

Misconceptions About Contacts

Many people retain the image of someone interrupting a sporting event with the words "hold it, nobody move!" and then searching for a lost contact. They are left with the impression that contacts cannot be worn during strenuous activity. In truth, some special oversized lenses are made to fit securely and can be worn confidently, even when swimming.

People often assume that children cannot be fitted with contact lenses. The fact is that even very young children have been successfully fitted. Most important, of course, is the need for contacts to improve vision, and the child must be MATURE enough to handle the lenses properly.

And there are some who still believe that contact lenses are dangerous to wear. The truth is that contacts are SAFE and can be worn for many years, provided they are fitted properly, cared for hygienically, and the eyes are examined regularly. Being plastic, they even offer some protection to the eye.
