Color Blindness
The term color blind is often applied to people who, strictly speaking, do not suffer color blindness. Only a few individuals actually see the world entirely in black and white. In most other cases, the problem is a color deficiency which makes it difficult to recognize certain colors or shades.
The commonest type of color problem is the eye which uses all three primary colors, but in wrong proportions. Another form is the person who only uses two of the three primary colors. Such an individual will be either red blind, green blind, or, extremely rare cases, blue blind.
It is a genetic defect which occurs primarily in men. Sixteen times as many men as women suffer from this form of color blindness. While there is no known cure, all is not hopeless. Some interesting work has been done with filters and tinted contact lenses which often help the individual discriminate between colors.

Views On Dental Health

The Rule Of Three
Any teeth are susceptible to decay if they meet three conditions. You've got to have bacteria in your mouth, eat foods with sugar in them, and have a tooth that's susceptible to the decay attack.
Unfortunately, these are conditions that everyone can meet. Bacteria thrive on the human mouth. And the bacteria that love to eat teeth are in ecstasy. Your mouth is their heaven.
Even if you don't eat candy, a lot of foods have sugar in them. And you want to give up eating apple pie?
As for susceptible teeth, very few can withstand the constant barrage of bacteria that feast on foods with sugar. Tooth enamel is the hardest substance in the human body. But the bacteria that feed on teeth create acid. Without good oral hygiene and regular dental care, the acid soon breaks down the enamel, causing cavities. Unstopped, it soon finds its way to the tooth's pulp and can destroy the tooth completely.
Taking good care of your teeth, with regular dental checkups, can change "Rule of Three" to "Cavity-Free".
