Around The Chowan County Farms - Preventing Injuries When Cutting Firewood

By Mike Williams
Knowledge of proper procedures is the best way to prevent injuries when cutting firewood. The portable sawmill and chainsaw safety demonstration off of Highway 17 in Hertford on November 2 at 11 A.M. is an excellent opportunity to see the correct way to fell trees and the general operation of chainsaws. It will also give some tips on maintenance of chainsaws.

Protective clothing is a basic step toward safety. The chainsaw operator can do something to prevent injuries to himself when using a saw. Wearing a hardhat when cutting trees is a must. More fatalities are caused by falling trees and limbs than by any other causes. Wearing safety goggles or a light - mesh screen mounted on the hard hat gives eye protection from flying sawdust and twigs when cutting. High noise levels from the saw can cause hearing loss although manufacturers have reduced these considerably over the past few years. Wearing hearing protection will prevent the loss of hearing. Sure-grip gloves will keep the operator's hand from slipping when operating the saw. Non-slip safety shoes provide sure footing. Steel-toed shoes will protect feet from being broken or crushed by rolling logs or heavy limbs. The operator should wear tight fitting clothes. This prevents getting them caught in the chain or causing a fall if they get caught in brush or limbs.

A person who has little or no experience cutting trees should first work with an experienced woodcutter. This should help him learn the safest and best way to cut a tree. Every tree to be cut has its own unique set of circumstances which must be considered. However, there are some basic points which apply to cutting any tree. First, a person should never work in the woods alone, although many injuries have occurred to the second person. The second person should be at least two tree-heights distance from the cutter. The main reason for having a second person is in case the cutter gets severely injured or pinned by a falling tree or limb.

The saw should be started on the ground or a firm place like a stump or log. This will prevent the moving chain from being pulled into the operator. A tree shouldn't be cut if it is windy. It may fall in any direction. Brush should be cut from around the tree and an escape path chosen and cleared before cutting the tree. The operator should determine the most likely direction the tree will fall. This is usually in the direction it is leaning. Other factors to consider are where other trees are located and which side of the tree to be cut has the heaviest limbs.

Removing the limbs (limbing) and cutting the tree into sections (bucking) are done next. Wood should be kept between the operator and the saw to prevent injuries. Kickbacks are most likely to occur when doing these jobs, so particular attention should be paid to having a firm footing and a firm grip on the saw. The operator should avoid getting the bar pinched in the cut. A sledge and wedge should be on hand if this occurs.

Many limbs are under tension and these should be cut from underneath. It is most likely the operator will become fatigued during these jobs. It is best to stop and rest before continuing.

There are many, many other tips on safely operating a saw which have not been mentioned; only the major ones have been covered. Using a chainsaw has to be learned by experience, but the novice cutter can gain much useful information about it beforehand by reading thoroughly the manufacturers handbook. More information on chainsaw safety may be obtained from the Chowan County Agricultural Extension Office.
