America's 400th Anniversary

An exciting weekend is already taking shape for the kick-off in North Carolina for the commemoration of America's 400th anniversary on July 13, 1984. A series of events now in the planning stages will draw participants and visitors to Dare County from all across the state.

A special advisory committee created by America's 400th Anniversary Committee to plan events for the weekend Nov. 24, in Dare County to discuss various special projects as well as transportation and traffic control.

Enthusiastic committee members discussed the possibility of expanding on events already scheduled for the state for Friday, July 13, in order to lengthen the period of commemorative activities. Beverly Smith and Shirley Mays, from Rocky-Mount and Elizabeth City respectively, submitted possible marine events which could spark regional participation. Other possibilities discussed include craft displays, entertainment and a massive fireworks display.

The state has already arranged for the commissioning of Elizabeth II, the representative 16th Century sailing vessel now being built on the Manteo waterfront to be scheduled for July 13. David Latham, site manager for the ship which will become the newest state historic site, told committee that tradition usually prohibits any ceremony connected with ships from being held on a Friday; however, the event has been scheduled to coincide with the 400th anniversary of the landing of the first exploratory expedition from England to the New World cannot be changed.

Other events planned by the state include the issuance of a commemorative stamp and medal and a command performance of the Lost Colony. The Elizabeth II and the visitor's center to be built on the island across Dough's Creek will be open to the public for the first time that weekend.

George Eason, with the Department of Transportation, presented a report on traffic control during the weekend and offered several suggestions for busing visitors between motels and other designated locations on the beach to the events on Roanoke Island. Eason will work with a technical task force created locally to handle logistical planning for the entire commemorative period. That task force includes

GETTING READY...In Raleigh, preparations for the 1983 session of the N.C. General Assembly took only a temporary break for Thanksgiving.

The session, this one termed the "long" session, is set to convene on January 12, 1983.

The legislators, once they're in town, will probably stay until June or even later. The "later" because most fiscal experts in state government (and out) don't feel a realistic picture of state revenues will be available until April or even May of 1983.

You may remember that last year the picture was so unclear as to require an additional "short" session just to determine pay raises for teachers and state employees.

It's history now, but they didn't get anything in that short session except the continuation of a provisional five per cent raise granted previously. Then too, there was the "freeze" on longevity and merit increases—making the state employees even less happy.

However, they did receive a ten per cent increase in 1981.

Understandably, the organizations representing the state employees have been getting ready for the upcoming budget session for some time now. One has gone on record for a twenty-five per cent increase over the next two years. The other major group, accepting that as unrealistic, has suggested twelve per cent.

Already, conversations are heated around the Capitol over what monies will be available for state pay raises in 1983.

In private conversations, administration aides say the

The Social Security Report

By Lee E. Wallio
Field Representative

A record of earnings for every person who has worked for wages or in self-employment covered by Social Security is maintained at Social Security headquarters.

The accuracy of these records depends mostly on the accuracy of reports made by employers.

Wages reports are made once a year using form W-2, the Wage and Tax Statement. Workers should check their copy of the W-2 form to make sure their employer completed the form correctly, showing all earnings covered by Social Security and the correct Social Security number.

A person can also check his own Social Security record to be sure their past earnings have been reported correctly.

All a person has to do is complete a postcard form called a "Request for Statement or Earnings".

In return, they will get a
