Importance Of Safety When Using A Chainsaw

The chain saw is a great tool when used properly, but it can be a great danger if used without due respect to the bodily damage it can inflict.

Once fairly well confined to use by professional woodcutters, chain saws now are almost as commonplace around the home as the ax. That means a lot of inexperienced people are using the saws, point out agricultural extension specialists at North Carolina State University.

The specialists' first recommendation is, don't take any chances. If in doubt about how to crank and operate the saw, get some advice from an experienced operator.

Next, be sure you are dressed properly. The saws can grab any loose hanging object, such as necktie, handkerchief, shirt tail or jacket hem. Even long hair can be dangerous around a chain saw.

Be sure of your footing. Wear shoes with non-slip soles. Also, a hardhat and safety glasses are suggested. Ear plugs can prevent serious damage to hearing. They should be worn when operating a chain saw.

Familiarize yourself with the operator's manual. Be sure the chain stops when the throttle is released. A saw that is hard to crank is a hazard. Have it serviced.

Stop the saw when carrying it from one tree to another.

Jack the tree off the ground when cutting firewood. This will keep the chain out of the dirt and rocks, both of which can dull the cutting edges.

Keep the chain sharp, both as a safety measure and to make the job easier on yourself. A dull chain will cut slow and kick out dust. A sharp chain will kick out chips and cut fast. Buy the proper file for your particular chain and use it frequently to touch up the cutting edges. If you don't know how, get some help from an expert.

Guard against kickback. This is one of the most dangerous hazards of chain sawing. It occurs when the saw kicks back toward the operator, usually while cutting limbs or saplings or when the nose of the bar hits something. Keep a firm grip on the handles.

When limbing a tree, cut on the opposite side from where you are standing. Don't cut above waist high. Small, loose limbs are apt to grab the saw causing kickback. Cut them with an ax or leave them in the woods.

Cutting firewood is hard service for the chain saw. Keep the chain adjusted and sharp. Let it cool periodically. This will give you a break from the noise and vibration as well as prolong the life of your saw.

Perquiman's Agricultural Extension Service Receives District Award

The Perquimans County staff of the N.C. Agricultural Extension Service has received a district award for outstanding programs.

Epsilon Sigma Phi, a statewide fraternity of extension workers, presented the Perquimans staff with a "County Performance Award" for having the best extension programs in the 17-county Northeastern Extension District.

Perquimans extension Chairman William R. (Bill) Jester accepted the award on behalf of the staff. Making the presentation was Dr. Paul Dew, assistant state extension director in charge of county programs.

The award, Dr. Dew said, is based on the total performance of the entire staff. Staff members in addition to Jester are: Paige L. Underwood, home economics extension agent; Juanita T. Bailey, associate home economics extension agent, 4-H and H. Jeff Copeland, assistant agricultural extension agent.

The Extension Service conducts educational programs in agriculture, home economics, 4-H, and community and rural development. It functions as an educational arm of the state's two land-grant universities—N.C. State University and A. & T. State University. Support is also received from county governments and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.
