

British And American Act Festival In 1984

A major celebration of British and American arts, folklife and sports will come to Durham in the summer of 1984.

Under the sponsorship of the N.C. Department of Cultural Resources and the Smithsonian Institution, The British American Festival will examine the interaction between Great Britain and the United States, with particular emphasis on ties between Great Britain and North Carolina.

The British American Festival will be part of the commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the Roanoke Voyages of 1584-87, which brought the first English explorers to the shores of North Carolina.

The Folklife Section of the N.C. Arts Council, a division of Cultural Resources, has major responsibility for organizing The British American Festival.

"I'm very pleased about what the British American Festival will mean for the success of the 400th anniversary commemoration," according to Sara W. Hodgkins, secretary of Cultural Resources. "The Festival will augment and complement events sponsored by America's Four Hundredth Anniversary Committee and help us reach as many people as possible."

The British American Festival will include events at West Point on the Eno Park and Duke University.

Events will feature British music, dance and food and will bring British citizens in contact with Americans. Participants will have a chance to talk informally about a wide range of topics, from World War II and the Great Depression to gardening and growing old.

Among events scheduled for Duke will be demonstrations of sports of British origin such as golf, soccer and cricket. Dramatic, dance and musical performances and readings by prominent British authors will take place in the evenings.

Also at Duke, a symposium of current issues in British-American relations will gather distinguished leaders from many fields.

The Department of Cultural Resources is soliciting assistance in planning the British American Festival from members of the public with substantial interest and experience in British-American relations. Festival planners particularly want to hear from any one who is British; who has lived in Great Britain; who served in World War II; or who has personal experience related to work, education, religion, folklife, popular culture or the

Health Watch - Hypothermia

Conserving energy in the winter usually means lower temperatures in your home or workplace. The cooler surroundings don't present a health hazard to most people. But when temperatures are very cold, some people—particularly the elderly and chronically ill—are at risk of developing hypothermia, a condition where the body temperature drops dangerously low. According to the North Carolina Medical Society, the most common victims of hypothermia traditionally have been hunters and campers—people who are exposed to cold temperatures for long periods of time.

Hypothermia is not always recognized because the expected symptoms—shivering and turning pale—do not occur. In fact, the hypothermia victim often feels comfortable while those around the victim complain about the cold. Slurred speech, irregular heart-beat, or dizziness are symptoms of hypothermia. A special thermometer which registers below the normal 94 mark is needed to detect it. Seek medical attention immediately if you suspect someone is suffering from hypothermia.
