Cold Months Danger House Plants

Check your house plants for signs of trouble during the cold months when the home heating system is on.

Trouble signs are very likely to show up in the form of "burned" leaf edges as if they had been scorched by flame. If you have plants with this symptom, the problem may be house heat.

Extension horticulturists at North Carolina State University suggest that house plant troubles often show up during winter when dry heat causes marginal burning or browning of leaves.

Another major source of house plant problems is too much water. There seems to be a natural tendency to want to water a plant to frequently, when it is in the house during cold weather. This will cause lower leaves to turn yellow and drop off.

Too little light is another cause of sickly house plants. This will cause them to grow spindly and one-sided.

The NCSU specialists suggest adding moisture to the room air to raise the humidity and help prevent leaf burning. Water the plant only when the soil is dry to the touch.

These two corrective measures alone will cure most of the problems with house plants.

If your plant isn't getting enough light, either move it to a better lighted window or consider using a special fluorescent light designed for plant culture.

Hints for Homemakers TIPS TO HELP YOU

Many families these days have at least one member who must adhere to a special diet, be it low sodium, low cholesterol, sugar-free or some other restriction. These pose extra problems for the family cook, preparing separate dishes aside from regular meals. Such special diets can become as simple as everyday meals if you prepare the foods in quantity ahead of time.

More and more people are freezing their own complete dinners, to be heated up in just minutes, thanks to the convenience of the new Vacuum Seal-a-Meal* from Dazey. Seal-a-Meal bags close with the touch of a finger and the vacuum action protects freshness, locking out flavor-stealing air and vapors.

Analgesia For Children

Maybe you have a child who keeps saying he doesn't want to go to the dentist because it will hurt. But with modern dental techniques, most of the pain and discomfort have disappeared. What has to be overcome in the case of children, in particular, is the sense of fear, and this can be accomplished with a technique called analgesia (literally, "absence of pain").

An analgesic is an anesthetic agent, such as nitrous-oxide gas, that relaxes the patient without causing loss of consciousness. Analgesia can produce a state of euphoria or well-being and tends to lessen a patient's awareness of his surroundings. This can make him much more tolerant to the thought of discomfort. If needed, local anesthetic can be used to temporarily remove feeling from the area being worked on.

One of the best known slogans is "You have nothing to fear but fear itself". Once a child's fear is overcome, he will probably be glad to get the care he needs to protect his dental health.

Ambliopia.... "Lazy Eye"

The word "ambliopia" comes from the Greek, meaning dull vision. In common usage, it refers to a particular condition in which the two eyes are feeding different information to the brain. Since the sense of vision is so vital and since the brain is so dependent on it, the two different inputs will not be tolerated. The brain will gladly sacrifice the benefits of stereoscopic vision to avoid the confusion of double vision. It simply learns to ignore the input from one eye—hence the name "lazy eye".

Over a period of time, the pattern becomes so ingrained that a normal binocular pattern may be lost. Then, even if the original cause of the problem was removed, the brain could not re-establish binocular vision by itself. It would need help.

CHILDREN DO NOT OUTGROW AMBLOPIA. It generally entails long-term treatment. This will probably involve correction of the sight problem with glasses or contact lenses, straightening the eye if it is turned, and a great deal of visual therapy.
