Stream Watch

Question: How can the North Carolina Department of Natural Resources and Community Development do a better job of protecting the water quality of the state's more than 40,000 miles of streams plus numerous lakes with limited personnel and equipment?

Answer: Round up a posse of concerned citizens from Manteo to Murphy and ask them to volunteer their time and energy to help monitor and protect water quality in local areas.

That's what the department is doing with the introduction of Stream Watch, a recently developed program that invites participation from environmentally concerned citizens and organizations in every county in North Carolina.

"With this innovative program, we are encouraging residents of Chowan, "to adopt" a stream or other body of water near their homes," said Dr. Jay Langfelder, assistant secretary for natural resources. "Citizens have a stake in clean, clear water and can be quite effective in helping to stop water pollution and in some cases to restore degraded streams."

Stream Watch will work like this:

An interested organization will choose a river basin, watershed, creek, river or lake it is interested in protecting. Then it will send to the department for a Stream Watch application, fill it out and return it, describing concerns for the selected body of water. The department will designate the organization as a STREAM WATCH organization and send it a proclamation signed by the secretary of the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development and the director of the Division of Environmental Management.

After that, the department will furnish information about activities in the river basin which could affect the selected stream's water quality, and the staff will provide slide/tape shows on water programs and issues.

Stream Watch organizations will be encouraged to conduct stream walks to obtain information on such activities as withdrawals of water, chemical spills, fish kills, algal blooms and erosion problems. In addition, the organization can promote river bank clean-ups, habitat improvement and erosion control campaigns.

The department will also make available Stream Watch signs for posting along the protected body of water or in the watershed.

Stream Watch is one of many outdoor related activities that will be showcased at Outdoors North Carolina - Expo '83, and exposition sponsored by the Department of Natural Resources and Community Development and the Raleigh Civic Center, March 24-27 in Raleigh.

For more information about STREAM WATCH or to obtain an application form, contact: Stream Watch Coordinator, Division of Environmental Management, Water Quality Section, P.O. Box 27687, Raleigh, N.C. 27611-7687, telephone 919/733-5083.

Poetry Competition

A $1,000 grand prize will be awarded in the Eighth Annual Poetry Competition sponsored by World of Poetry, a quarterly newsletter for poets.

Poems of all styles and on any subject are eligible to compete for the grand prize or for 99 other cash or merchandise awards, totaling over $10,000.

Says Contest Chairman, Joseph Mellon, "We are encouraging poetic talent of every kind, and expect our contest to produce exciting discoveries."

Rules and official entry forms are available from the World of Poetry, 2431 Stockton Blvd., Dept B, Sacramento, CA, 95817.

People who advertise in newspapers often find themselves winners. A recent survey showed that newspaper advertising is considered more believable than that of any other medium.
