

17 Study Wins Award

A study of the North Carolina segment of U.S. 17 has won the 1983 Award for Engineering Excellence, in an annual statewide competition sponsored by the Consulting Engineers Council of North Carolina.

Kimley - Horn and Associates, Inc., a Raleigh engineering and planning firm, has been cited by the state's private engineering firms for outstanding work on the U. S. 17 Corridor Study.

The study, sponsored by the N. C. Department of Transportation, examines the feasibility of improvements along the entire route of U.S. 17 in North Carolina, from the Virginia border to the South Carolina border.

The department commissioned the study with the goal of arriving at a phased implementation program - a step-by-step plan for improving U.S. 17 beginning with those areas where need was greatest.

North Carolina consulting engineers selected the study as the state's entry in national competition.

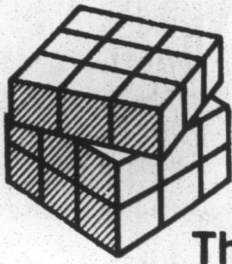

Kimley-Horn was cited for the combination of its technical engineering study of the area's transportation needs and its strong public participation program, which measured both rural and urban opinion and needs regarding the four-laning of the corridor.

Under the department's direction, Kimley-Horn first educated the public on the types of four-laning improvements available, from a simple four lane with uncontrolled access to a controlled access freeway. The firm then developed several alternatives for each segment of the highway before recommending a specific alternative for implementation.

The study also examined general features of the area that would be affected by changes to U.S. 17 - environmental and historical features, socio-economic and population factors, and plans for future development.

In addition to technical excellence, and strong public participation, the CEC also cited several unique aspects of the project - the unusual length of the corridor, the videotaping of the entire route in order to create a record for the study, and the attention devoted to the considerations of both local and interstate travel.
