MOTHER.

By Nada R. Ray

'Mid life's commotions disma, fears, 'mid cares and woes and floods of tears, how sweetly breaks upon the ear, some words of comfort or of cheer, yet of our friends there is not another who speaks as gently as our mother.

Here disappointments crowd each other, our brightest hopes soon fade, and friends long trusted often and give, we scarcely know whom to trust, yet though we fear to trust another, we're not afraid to trust our mother.

A word here where there's so much to be said, some friends we have we love, but their love we know that it is not as pure, but though beloved by many, brother, there's none that loves our mother.

Among the names to mortals given, 'tis none like our mother; home is heaven, for home we know she days, be here; then let us while we live, each other remember and be true to mother.

When gentle twilight sits On day's forsaken throne, 'Mid the sweet hush of eventide Muse by thyself alone. And at the time of rest Ere sleep asserts its power, Hold pleasant converse of thyself In meditation's bower. There are three words that sweetly blend

That on the heart are graven, Precious soothing balm they lend— They're Mother, Home and Heaven.
