We may hear a lot of howling about this thing of evolution. Dayton may be immortal in connection with the subject. We may read enough stories, within three score and ten, if pinned end to end would reach to the moon and hang over in space a few million miles telling of the aeons of time having passed since we were tadpoles on this old ball of mud. We may observe many freaks of nature as proof of the argument. We may dig up a thousand Tutankamens and decipher a million hieroglyphics. We may "know where Columbus went when he sailed from sunny Spain. We know what causes thunder and we know what causes rain—but there's one thing that's puzzling—what's gone with all the Adam's apples or "goozles"—has everybody succeeding in swallowing them—permanently—seems that no one possesses any nowadays.

In the vicinity lives or rather exists as do most hounds who support themselves, a most freakish pup of the canine tribe. He will not hunt or associate with anyone who uses profane language. Nothing offends this canine so much as the telling of untruthful stories. On opossum hunts he has been known to abandon the chase for the simple reason that some one of the party possessed feet with an offensive odor. He has refused to accompany mixed parties because some of the feminine gender was rouged beyond the greatest heights of the ordinary lipstick artist's dream. This humble canine possessing the pride of ancestry—being of an obscure lineage—just a plain obedient canine and a benevolent benefactor of mankind—exceptional—a sensible dog.
