PROTECT NEW PASTURE BY MOWING WEEDS

Cows do not like weeds, and newly planted pastures, particularly where the stand of grass and clover is poor, should be mowed to destroy these pasture pests.

"Weeds do considerable harm to pastures," says E. J. Kirby, extension agronomist at State College and student of pastures in North Carolina who was a visitor in the County this week studying pastures in this section.

"As a rule, we find more weeds in those pastures where there is a poor stand of grass and clover but even where there is a good stand in one and two year old pastures, it is not uncommon for weeds to give much trouble. Where the weeds are mown once or twice after seeding the pastures, the sod gets ahead and the weeds give little or no trouble thereafter."

Mr. Kirby points out that probably the greatest injury to pastures from weeds comes from the choking and shading done to the grasses. However, the weeds also use up the moisture and plant food and if all of these influences are not checked by mowing the weeds take the pasture and little grazing is obtained.

Midsummer is the time to get rid of the weeds. Those grasses and clovers which were retarded by the late spring and subsequent drought will quickly come into their own if the weeds are clipped. Mowing either with a machine or by hand will permit the pasture sod to get a permanent lead, states Mr. Kirby. Sometimes, he states, on newly cleared land, the pastures are frequently injured by bushes. Shade trees are good in the pasture and most grasses and clovers make good growth in the shade of trees, but no grass or clover can stand the dense shade of low bushes. Mr. Kirby states that the bushes should be cut out as soon as they appear.

Where the pastures are properly protected from these two enemies, weeds and bushes, they will give heavy production of pasturage for many years.
