

FERTILIZE YOUR WHEAT

By W. F. Pate, Agronomist
Wheat in North Carolina occupied in 1925, 438,000 acres and ranked fourth in acreage in the State, being exceeded only by corn, cotton and tobacco. The average yield per acre for the State for wheat for 1925 was 11 bushels.

To produce wheat profitably, it is essential that the yields per acre be greatly increased over the yields that have been obtained in the past.

To increase the yields, it is necessary to put into practice the best types of farming. This will include the following:

1. Seed of high yielding strain suitable to the region.
2. Treating the seed for smut.
3. Careful preparation of the seed bed.
4. Using soils suitable for wheat growing.
5. Seeding at the right time.
6. Using enough seed.
7. Applying the proper plan of fertilization.

In the fertilization of wheat, it should be kept in mind that phosphoric acid and potash will tend to develop a strong, healthy plant with a large root system which enables the plant to withstand freezing and drought better than if fertilizer was not used. On soils of medium fertility or less, nitrogen should be used in the fertilizer to give the plants a good start and vigor, but large applications of nitrogen should probably not be used before seeding as some loss may occur during the winter. Probably the better way to use nitrogen for wheat is to apply a portion in the fall before the crop is seeded and the other part as a top dressing in the spring when new growth begins.

For North Carolina, the agricultural experiment station recommends 300 to 400 pounds of an 8-5-3 fertilizer for wheat on sandy soils, 300 to 500 pounds per acre of a 12-4-0 fertilizer for clay soils and 400 to 600 pounds for mountain soils.

By using the above recommendations, not only will the acreage yield be increased but the wheat will be grown at a greater profit.
