$700,000,000 a year—the Railroad's contribution to

THIS country cannot stand still. It must go forward to meet the ever-increasing conditions of this progressive age.

As Railroad transportation is by far the most important factor in promoting the country's progress, railroad development must not be halted.

To afford the best possible facilities and service, the United States railroads have spent in the past six years $4,233,000,000, most of which was borrowed capital. This represents a yearly investment of over $700,000,000 to take care of the demands of commerce.

In order to provide adequate transportation service to its patrons, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad has authorized and spent in a little over six years, or since the end of Federal control on March 1, 1920, a total of $150,700,000 over and above its regular operating expenses and taxes.

This money has been spent to provide modern locomotives and cars, safety devices, double track, and many other improvements.

To keep up this high standard and make provision for the future, there must be an adequate margin between railroad revenues and railroad expenses. This can be secured only as the public makes its influence felt, so as to insure the railroads equitable taxation, fair rate regulations, and just laws.
