

BRASSTOWN

A moving picture show will be given at the Community House Monday night, July 23.

The new silo on the John C. Campbell Folk Farm is now under plans for completion. Also a wooden workshop is soon to be built. Definite plans for the erection of the new schoolhouse to be joined to the Community House are being laid. Everybody is anxious to see this good work in progress.

The State Highway Commission has just completed the Tarheel Macadam road from Hayesville, N. C., to Brasstown. We realize that this is a wonderful improvement to this part of the state.

Mr. Fred O. Scroggs, merchant of Brasstown, and buyer of Indian relics has added a fine Indian relic to his vast collection of Indian flints, clay pipes, tomahawks, etc.

We notice that wooden bowls are coming into fashion again in this part. Mr. Scroggs has in his store three sizes, large, medium and small. Prices $1.25, $1.00 and .75.

Miss Eva Teems and Mrs. Amos Ledford, of Ogden, N. C., were the guests of the Postmaster, Friday night, July 13.

The Postmaster's mother, Mrs. Susan Beach, is gaining strength pretty well since the fall she had in the spring. Aunt Susan is blind, but she looks with faith into the untied future, expecting greater accomplishments to come. She is fond of the Bible and good sermons.

The writer was at her home some few days ago, and read from their book, "A Quest for Souls," one of Dr. Truett's sermons. Let us all in our respective communities visit the age and comfort them. We can show them our love and appreciation for what they have done for the uplift of our country.

Mr. F. J. Watkins and family, of Peachtree were visitors on Brasstown Saturday evening. Mr. Watkins tells in an interesting way how he built flues of rock and cement in his brooder house last spring, and the success he obtained from them. Mr. Watkins is a very successful farmer and poultry raiser of Peachtree. Those interested in poultry raising would profit from his new experiences gained.

In a short talk with Uncle Fulton Cunningham we learn that he has taken the Atlanta Constitution for twenty-five years, but has discontinued it for he Knoxville Journal which he says he likes better. He never fails to read William Rule's column, "As I See It." He is also a subscriber to The Scout, and would not do without it.

Aunt Jane Standridge tells us that they have never done without a paper of some sort in their home. Not many of us can say that.

Bert Hogan relates his first experience in hiving bees in the public road. He says that he had plenty of fun watching people push their cars on slippery ground pass the bees while he was hiving them.

Mr. Howard Hall and family went from Sunday School Sunday, and took dinner with Mr. Oscar Penland. The finest green beans I have ever eaten, said Mr. and Mrs. Hall, "were served at Mr. Penland's." Mrs. Penland is a splendid cook, and no one could go to a place where he is more welcome to eat than to Mr. and Mrs. Penland's.

Mr. Penland talks a great deal, and can tell some of the funniest things which happened years ago in his recollection. He tells of an occasion he had to fork hay with Professor L. E. Mauney on Martin's Creek somewhere near the property Mr. Mauney now owns.

Back in those times people wore scissor-tail coats, and stiff collars. Anyway Mr. Penland and Mr. John Ingram were forking hay together, when in a stammering way Mr. Ingram said to Mr. Penland, "I tell you the best hand in the hay field you ever seed." "Who?" inquired

Mr. Penland. "Why Professor Mauney, that's who," says Mr. Ingram. "No, he can't beat me, replied Mr. Penland. "By-gosh, you'll see when he comes this evening," continued Mr. Ingram.

Mr. Penland tells that along in the evening sure enough Professor Mauney came. He laid back his scissor-tail coat, and pulled his collar off, and layed them on a rock near where they were at work. He got his fork, and went to it. "Law me! I have never seen such hay-forking in my life," says Mr. Penland. I have never anymore said that I could fork hay.

Mr. Penland also knows the oldest man in this county, perhaps, Mr. Henry Brendle is the man. We would like to have a long story in The Scout about Mr. Brendle.

Mrs. Penland has a bed which she reckons to be over one hundred years old. It was her grandmother Green's. She also has a clock which was purchased about 1832 by her grandfather, Raitis Standridge. The clock could be put in running condition by a little work on the pendulum.
