Housewives and Scientists

THE twenty-fifth Annual Convention of the National Canners Association, held in Chicago this year, proved beyond a doubt that the two main dependencies of the canning industry are still housewives and scientists. This is not as incongruous as it seems, since a housewife may well be a scientist in these modern times, and women certainly depend on scientists to a vast extent to safeguard their health and that of their families.

That this confidence is not misplaced in connection with the canning industry is proved by the fact that even before the passage of the Pure Food Law twenty-five years ago the industry was depending upon scientist to keep it straight, that it helped the late Dr. Harvey W. Wiley to pass the Pure Food Law, and that it originated and fostered the passage of the McNary Mapes amendment to the Pure Food Law which informs the housewife about the quality of food which she is buying in addition to the protection of perfect purity afforded by the original law.

Many Scientists Spoke

If any additional evidence were needed of the determination of the whole canning industry to make its products as wholesome and good as is humanly possible, it would be afforded by the character of the scientists who spoke at the various sessions of the Convention in Chicago. In addressing a session on home economics, Miss Frances L. Swain, President of the American Home Economics Association and Director of Household Arts in the Chicago City Schools, said:

"We know that we can trust what canners tell us because of the high standing of the scientists who do their work."

Among these scientists who addressed the Convention were the following men from great universities: Walter H. Eddy of Columbia University, New York City; F. C. Gaylord and J. H. MacGillivray of Purdue University and D. M. Doty of the Purdue University Experiment Station at Lafayette, Ind.; E. R. Lancashire of Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio, and J. C. Walker of the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

The Research Departments

Still other scientists who spoke came from the research laboratories of the Association and of the largest can manufacturing companies. In speaking of their work Theresa A. Clow, Director of the Harriet Hammond McCormick Memorial in Chicago, said: "In institutional buying for a large number of people the only advertising which we use is the reports which are sent to us from the research departments of the industry."

The men from the Research Laboratories of the National Canners Association, Washington, D. C., who spoke at the Convention were W. D. Bigelow, Director, E. F. Kohman, J. R. Esty, Director of the Western Branch Laboratory in San Francisco, Charles G. Woodbury, Director of Raw Products Research, H. R. Smith and E. J. Cameron. The men from the Research Division of the American Can Company who delivered addresses were R. H. Winters, L. G. Weiner, R. S. Scull, C. W. Curry and D. F. Sampson. Those from the Research Department of the Continental Can Company were W. H. Harrison, Director, C. H. Bloedorn, L. F. Pratt, G. V. Hallman and A. E. Stevenson.

Government Authorities, Too But this is not the whole tale of trained scientists who contributed their knowledge at this Convention. National and State governments also sent their men. These included Karl F. Kellerman, Associate Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry and William E. Lewis of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, R. S. Hollingshead, Assistant Chief of the Foodstuffs Division of the United States Department of Commerce, Carl S. Pederson and C. E. Sayre of the New York Agricultural Experiment Station, Geneva, N. Y., and A. W. Pomeroy of the Wisconsin Department of Agriculture and Markets, Madison, Wis.

Many Housewives Heard From

With all these scientists speaking about the proper production, processing and safeguarding of canned foods, the housewife's viewpoint was presented by a group of women whose wide contact with many housewives has transformed them into a sort of distilled essence of the universal American housewife.

Those who spoke on what the housewife expects in canned foods and wants to know about them were Miss Alice Blinn of the Delineator, New York City, Ruth Atwater, Director of the Home Economics Division of the National Canners Association, Frances L. Swain, President of the American Home Economics Association and Director of Household Arts in the Chicago City Schools, Sybil Woodruff, Associate Professor of Foods, University of Illinois, Faith McAuley, Department of Institutional Administration, University of Chicago, Theresa A. Clow, Director of the Harriet Hammond McCormick Memorial in Chicago, Mrs. Wilbur E. Fribley, Chairman of the American Home Department of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, and Miss Lita Bane of the Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.*
