

NEWS PICK-UPS

We want to make an apology right here and now. Following the creed of all good journalists...

As a result we find this thing by cation last week Fred Brendie had to go and fall off of the beam theater on his head...

That was pretty important so we wrote the thing in about six different sentences in about six different ways.

As a result we find this thing by saying, "Fred fell off the building in the middle of the night while fixing a wire and darned near busted his skull"...

Tips: We meant to put under this paragraphical caption last week this remark: "Never bet on a Georgia team"...

Could you imagine a fellow being named "Red Grange" ever being anything else but an ice-toting football player?

Wonder who that fellow was last week that broadcast the Tennessee-Duke game. One thing we're certain of: he was a Tennessee supporter.

On one occasion he told us Dickens was "off—he's free—he's going down the field with every Duke man off his feet"...

Boy, we could have done better than that at Asheville.

The biggest laugh up the collective sleeve roundabout here lately came at that movie the other night when the winsome one told the "big bad man" that her husband was to go to the Tennessee valley to direct the building of a model town.

Quoth he: "What a terribly primitive place to go."

Oscar Mauney, who farms out on Peachtree, said he raised a nice crop of tobacco during Hoover's administration and sold it all.

He got another good crop when Roosevelt went into office but said he didn't come out so good on it because everybody went and bought store-bought tobacco.

"I'm taking a big chance this year", says Oscar, "I'm going to put in another crop."

Wonder if he's Republican by any chance?

This being the last paragraph of the 48th Vol., 13th number of the Cherokee Scout, we went and handed it to Roy, the boy who does a good job of turning this paper out.

"Great guns, is this all you can find to write about," he exclaims and leans down on the keyboard of the Linotype machine so hard and long about 50 mats spewed out of the thing (which cost about 10 cents apiece) and he had to pick them all up and run them back in the machine again.

Moral: Always count ten before you hit a Linotype keyboard—and then lock t before you hit it.

It's not as much fun picking up mats as it is looking at football games. (Oh, if we'll just get through this season).

Asks Reckless Drivers To Prepare Own 'Obits'

Philadelphia.—Rober G. Taylor, editor and publisher of the Kennett News and Advertiser of Kennett Square, recently carried a rather amusing yet truly serious item upholding the safety-first campaign for motorists which has become statewide. It said:

"This new paper asks the co-operation of all motorists who are seriously considering mixing alcohol with their gasoline over the week-end. The editor will appreciate having these drivers call at the office of the News and Advertiser, bringing with them one of their latest photos and a complete history of their lives and the location where they expect to do most of their mixing. This will save the editor much time and accounts will be accurate."

Harrison Douglas, a St. Louis carpenter, still shaves with a razor bought by his great-great-grandfather 126 years ago and in use ever since. The ancient blade has been passed along from father to eldest son in the Douglas family, and the present owner has used it every other day since 1892.

Melvin Butler, San Jose, Calif., violin maker, developed a glue for the repair of musical instruments and refused $5,000 for the formula. Two years later he decided to sell, only to find that he had forgotten it.

Agnes were visitors of Mrs. W. H. Abernathy Sunday afternoon.
