Clayton Not Guilty In Scroggs' Death

Ople Clayton, 26, of Brasstown, was found not guilty in Cherokee county Superior court Friday, in connection with the death of Waldo Scroggs, also of Brasstown, who died June 13.

The two weeks criminal-civil term, which opened Monday a week ago presided over by Judge W. F. Harding, will come to a close in Murphy either Friday or Saturday from all indications.

Quail Season Opens On Friday Morning

Hurrah! The quail season opens in Cherokee county Friday.

Sportsmen will be glad enough to hear this news but many local citizens who know the woods and fields well seem to inject a wry note into the fun for, as Mr. John Hampton says, "I'm afraid there aren't many birds this season. At least there's not many on my place at Little Brasstown".

TVA DAM . . .

A transmission line from Rhymer's Ferry in Graham county has been strung into the dam site and work was completed on the project last week. This line will furnish power for the TVA project from the Nantahala Light and Power company, a subsidiary of the Aluminum Company of America, in Graham county. About 250 men, mostly from Graham county, were used on the project.

The dam site is accessible from both sides of the river at present.

A state highway is used down the north side of the river to a point two miles below Unaka where the TVA forces, when actual work was first started on the project, converted a mountain trail into a crushed rock-finished road over which TVA and Codell company machinery was hauled and workmen got to their jobs.

Bridge Is Aid To Work

Once the bridge, capable of supporting 65 tons, was constructed across the river, the principal access road construction work quickly got under way.

On this project it was necessary to cut around and through the mountains and to ford a number of streams. Several bridges have already been put in and at other places it is necessary at present to detour around the creeks.

Many parties visit the dam site each week-end, it is said, and make the drive over the river.

WPA forces in Murphy started two weeks ago to put a crushed rock finish on the Unaka road so it will hold up all winter.

The route on the south side of the river to the dam site follows the Copperhill highway to what is known as the Shoal Creek road which runs off to the right. This unpaved but good surfaced road runs into the principal access road about five miles below Suit. This marks about the half way point between the extremities of the principal access road.

No out-of-the-ordinary work is anticipated at the dam site until the preliminary undertakings such as building the road to the quarry; erecting houses on the town site and roads are constructed.

This should be completed in the spring, it is anticipated, and actual work on the dam itself begun. Until that time it is believed the TVA will not hire any large additional number of men.

Change of Scene

The scene at the dam site, 18 miles below Murphy on the Hiwassee river is totally different today from what it was a little over two years ago when engineers first came to Murphy to look for the best site on this section of the river.

On numerous occasions it appeared as if the TVA would build the dam on the river—probably in Tennessee. Each time Murphy literally stepped up in arms about it, and carried the plea for TVA benefits to TVA officials at Knoxville and to government officials at Washington.

Although the project has not yet hit its "second wind" stride and a great deal of activity is expected in Murphy, there seems to have been very little out of the ordinary grade change that was conservatively anticipated.

With the permanent arrival here of about 75 TVA families, there has naturally been an increase in business. And likewise more businesses have been started. But there is little outside of the usual activity in other lines of business. There has been no appreciable change in real estate and very little residence building has been done, although many houses and stores have been repaired.

Two Children Are Treated For Rabies

Coy Sparks, of Suit, and Ruth Dyer, of Letitia, are being treated in Murphy for bites sustained when mad dogs ran loose in the lower end of the county recently.

So far as can be determined these two children are the only two persons to have been bitten.

When it was learned that there were mad dogs in the Shoal Creek community and that they were biting citizens of that section and other dogs and animals, Dr. J. N. Hill, county physician and quarantine officer, two weeks ago had the county board of health pass a 90 day quarantine against permitting dogs to run loose.

In 1896 Joe Mallett, a rancher living near Snohomish, Wash., made a vow that he would never again enter the town if William J. Bryan was defeated for president that year. He has kept his vow.

On the theory that folks like to deal with big shots in an establishment where they trade, a Chicago jewelry firm makes this possible for all its customers. Every salesman has the title of vice-president.
