What are canners going to do for sugar, metal jar tops and cans? The answer is: Sugar, tin cans, jars and tops will be made available for home canning through the usual suppliers. That is, from your store or from any other place where you are used to getting them. Your local rationing board will announce how you are to get additional amounts of sugar for home canning.

If you should have a crop of fruit ready for canning some time this season and not as much sugar as you usually have, you can put up the fruit without sugar and plan to sweeten it later as you use it. It may not hold its shape, or color, or flavor quite as well as if you had used sugar, but it will keep all right.
