

DDT Is Still Under Study

DDT, highly effective supplement to nature's own method of controlling insect pests, is still under intensive study by researchers and the results of tests made to date are encouraging, according to specialists of the Satta College Extension Service.

One of the early fears — that DDT would destroy too many bees which are useful as honey collectors and particularly valuable as pollinizers of crops such as legumes and fruit — has been virtually eliminated by the discovery that DDT is actually less deadly to bees than the arsenical sprays now commonly used. Beekeepers now are beginning to regard DDT as a promising relief for bee losses by arctic poisoning.

Usual objections to the new pest control have been predicated upon the contention that it would "upset the balance of nature," a theory that beneficial insects, birds and other predators can sufficiently control insect pests. So, intensive tests of DDT are being made to determine its effect upon fish, birds, beneficial insects and other wild life.

In regard to the widespread use of the chemical, it now appears for the first time as a practical control for some forest insects.

The current "crop" of beetles and other injurious pests in North Carolina has been described by Extension specialists as normal with no dangerous outbreak indicated.

I DON'T CARE SO MUCH ABOUT THE KIDS LARNIN' READIN' AND WRITIN'-- BUT I'D SURE LIKE TO FIND A TOWN TAMER.

I HAVE AN IDEA.

ON MY WAY EAST, I'LL SPREAD THE WORD ABOUT WHAT ELMTOWN NEEDS.
