These are on the farms of Dillard and Wilbur McCombs, W. D. Townsend and J. Franklin Smith, all of Murphy, North Carolina.
 These farmers will compare this material with solid ammonium nitrate on a cost per acre basis, value per pound of actual nitrogen applied from both sources and final yield per acre. Will it pay? These farmers want to find out.
 "Several other farmers were interested in trying this material this year, but their corn got too big before the liquid nitrogen became available to use in these demonstrations," says Mr. Farley.
 To most of the farmers it isn't a question of selling them on the value of nitrogen side-dressing. What they are more interested in is a cheaper source of this corn maker.
