VALLEY VIEWS

By Evelyn Baker

MRS. CARPENTER

The following obituary was sent to Mrs. Tom Hay by Mrs. E. L. Mountfort of Damariscatta, Me. Mrs. Mountfort was in Mrs. Carpenter's home this winter and had known her for a number of years.

A tribute to Mrs. Carpenter also appeared in the Bradenton, Fla. Herald. Mrs. Mountfort's obituary follows:

Portrait painter, landscape artist and poet, Mrs. Ethel Frances (Gee) Carpenter, died Wednesday morning, Mar. 17 in Bradenton, Fla., where she had spent winters for many years. But Little Rock Studio, Andrews, N. C., built by her husband, the late Owen Carpenter, educator and artist, also writer, was her real home, where she loved to paint the ever changing mountains.

From a tiny girl with a widowed mother (and help from grandpa) she never faltered in her pursuit of art—Ohio, Battle Creek, Chicago, later to the ancestral home of her husband in Manila, Ind., among the artists of Florida the far west she followed the star.

Deeply religious she respected the faith of her husband who came of a family of Episcopalian rectors, but alone, after his death, felt more at home with Methodists, Congregationalists or Presbyterians, and contributed most generously, but unpretentiously, to prisoner uplift and all other good causes.

Almost 77, the frail little body that had housed a truly great spirit, became very tired and was laid to rest among her forebears, in the burial lot of a cousin in Youngstown, Ohio.

Lee Roy Gilbert was home last week from N. C. State College in Raleigh.

Here is an excellent example of the sound insurance rule of having adequate coverage where it is most needed.

Unfortunately, however, it is usually a difficult problem for the average man to determine exactly what insurance coverage he needs and how much is adequate. Everyone requires a different insurance program. What may be sufficient coverage for your neighbor may not be enough for your needs.

To enable you to buy the modern insurance you need quickly and conveniently—and with the important benefit of expert advice—this agency will be glad to extend a helping hand. We are at your service at all times.
