Poultry Parasites Are worse Now

While external parasites may infect chickens at any time of the year, they are especially prevalent during warm, humid weather which often occurs in spring and summer, according to R. S. Dearstyn, head of the poultry science department at State College.

He says that while such parasites seldom actually kill poultry, they retard growth in young birds and, unless checked, will materially retard egg production in layers. A heavy infestation may occur in a very short period of time because of the enormous rapidity of reproduction of the parasites.

The common red mite hides in perch poles and walls of the house the cracks and crevices in nests, during the day and comes out to feed on the chickens at night. Dearstyn says poultrymen should detach several perch poles once a week in warm weather to examine undersides for mites. They appear as a reddish-gray mass.

Should infestation be found, thoroughly clean the house. Clean out nests, burn nesting material, spray or paint perch poles and interior of the house with equal parts used motor oil and kerosene or with carbolineum or coal tar stock dips. Repeat treatment in seven to 10 days.

Lice differ in that they spend their entire life on the chickens and do not live long if detached from the body of the bird. Consequently, effort should be made to detach the lice by dusting powders or nicotine sulfate spread on perches about 30 minutes before the birds go to roost. Repeat treatment in a week.

Mrs. Beasley, 76 Succumbs

DO YOU EXPECT A MIRACLE ?

People are creatures of habit, and habits form buying patterns. It is now possible for merchants to determine what people want to buy and when they want to buy by checking their own sales records and those of THE RETAILER* to see what and when people bought last year.

Despite economic trends, Seasonal Sales Patterns of past years have proved an accurate reflection of future sales patterns and a reliable base on which retailers can plan current and future advertising.

The next step after determining and securing the merchandise people are interested in buying, is to inform the thousands of prospective customers about it. Newspaper advertising reaches the masses — tells your story to a great number of people in your market at low cost.
