It is an age-old truth that the crop you grow depends on the seed you plant and the way you plant it. A very modern group of food growers, the canning industry, understands the importance of this ancient truth.

All those who have grown canning crops know that canners almost literally stand shoulder to shoulder with their growers to help reap the literally stand shoulder to shoulder with their growers to help reap the finest possible harvest. All over the country, canners cooperate with seed suppliers, machinery manufacturers and farmers to make agriculture a scientific, predictable business. The results show, in the last 20 years, the yield per acre for tomatoes, the leading vegetable crop, has almost tripled. Peas and corn, next in importance, have increased yield per acre of 66% and 76% respectively. Quality of the crop has improved simultaneously. Canners have made much of this increase possible.

Let's be specific. Ninety-five out of a hundred canners provide farmers with seed or plants for tomatoes, peas, corn and other processing crops. They do so because research has proved to them that this is the best seed available. These seeds have been developed through years of breeding and tailored to meet the canner's specific needs.

Farm machinery is another area of joint interest to canners and Farm machinery is another area of joint interest to canners and farmers. Years ago, canners inspired the introduction of the pea viner farmers. Years ago, canners inspired the introduction of the pea viner for shelling green peas, saving everyone time, money, and work. Now, at the canners' instigation, a mechanical corn harvester reaps the corn in many a field; soon, a mechanical bean picker will join the ranks of farm machinery. The corn harvester will do much to keep the corn growers in business during periods of manpower shortages. The bean picker will render the same service to bean growers.

When harvest time comes, farmer and canner both reap a rich crop recause they have sown and tended it with knowledge and care.
