SPEAKING OF CARDS

TAKE A CARD

You, too, can do card tricks and you don't need any special paraphernalia, magic wand or mumbo jumbo. Just a deck of ordinary playing cards and a fellow conspirator.

Now try this card trick, "Tap Happy," on your friends next time you attend a party.

Take any nine cards from the deck while making certain to include one Nine (Nine of Spades, Nine of Diamonds, etc.). Lay them out, face up, in the form of an "H" (as shown in the illustration).

Have your accomplice leave the room while you get one of your audience to select one of the cards in the pattern—without removing it, of course. Then call your assistant back in.

Without speaking a word, proceed to tap each of the cards once, one at a time. Your partner gets his clue in where you tap the Nine card. You see, the pattern of the pips on the Nine card corresponds to the pattern of your nine-card layout. Thus, if someone has selected the Four of Spades in the lower right-hand corner, you tap the lower right-hand pip on the Nine. Where you tap the other cards makes little difference but you should try not to make your tap on the Nine any different than your others.

Your accomplice should wait until after you have tapped all the cards before he tells what card has been selected.

You will find that around the third or fourth time you do the trick everyone in your audience will have his own pet theory as to how it works. You can alter the trick by using more than one tap per card, by having more than one nine in the layout, or by many other variations.

"Tap Happy" is one of several card tricks contained in a colorful, illustrated booklet, "It's All in the Cards," recently published and offered in exchange for an Ace of Spades from an old or used deck. In addition, the booklet contains some interesting facts about the little-known history of cards, suggests some exciting variations on old games, lists a few unusual uses for cards and otherwise provides countless ways for you to get more fun out of your deck of playing cards. Campaign Against Pine Beetles Begun

A federal-state-private industry program offers hope of ending "one of the worst forest insect epidemics in the history of North Carolina and Tennessee," a U. S. Forest Service researcher declared this week.

R. Joseph Kowal, visiting lecturer for Duke University's course on forest pests, said in an interview that a full-scale attack has been launched against the Southern pine beetle in western North Carolina and eastern Tennessee.

Kowal, who lectured before some 24 Southeastern foresters attending the forest pathology course at Duke, is chief of the Division of Forest Insect Research, Southeastern Forest Experiment Station, U. S. Forest Service, Asheville. The Duke course is sponsored by the University's School of Forestry.

Morning Weariness and Thyroid Deficiency

People who feel fatigued when arising in the morning after a sound sleep, and then slowly recover stamina during the day and feel brightest and most energetic when it's time to return to bed at night, may be suffering from a mild thyroid deficiency described by doctors as "the hypometabolic state."

Some of these people chronically complain of vague aches and pains and have been labeled unjustly as hypochondriacs, neurotics, or anxiety personalities.

Actually the chemical processes in their bodies which convert food into energy are operating at a snail's pace. Doctors believe that the slowdown results from a shortage of thyroid hormone in body tissues.

Other commonly encountered symptoms indicating this form of hypothyroidism may be an intolerance to cold, brittle nails, dry skin, lack of perspiration and, in women, menstrual disorders.

In a seven year study conducted by Dr. B. A. Watson of Clifton Springs, N. Y., published recently in the New York State Journal of Medicine, it was found that women are much more prone to this state than men, and also that its incidence increases with age.

Of almost 15,000 patients admitted for various complaints to the Clifton Springs Clinic and Sanitarium, Dr. Watson found that more than 200 were suffering from the hypometabolic state. The highest rate was among patients in their forties and fifties. In Dr. Watson's opinion: "Physicians should consider the diagnosis of hypometabolic state before labeling a chronically complaining patient as a psychoneurotic, hypochondriac, anxiety state, etc."

The investigation confirmed the growing belief that a subnormal metabolic rate is not the only indication of thyroid deficiency as had been generally assumed. The morning tiredness, aches and pains were much more reliable signs of the condition. Trial treatment with dried thyroid given orally was found to be a reliable method of diagnosis. If the symptoms disappeared, the hypometabolic state was presumed present.

Continued treatment with dried thyroid, or with a purified thyroid extract in tablet form called Proloid, produced lasting improvement in a majority of patients, restoring a feeling of complete well-being in very many. As a test, treatment was discontinued temporarily in a few patients. Their symptoms returned almost immediately, but were controlled again when treatment was resumed.
