ing for them with transportation back to camp, called the United States Service at Burnsville for help.

Rangers and assistants were immediately dispatched to the scene. Four men from the Marion office joined in the search. The Rangers conducted an all-night search, finally locating the lost scouts the following morning about 10:30.

It was a dangerous mission that the Rangers and their assistants were called upon to carry out. Yet it was nothing new, for they are called on for such hazardous jobs from time to time.

Farmers Asked To Support Safety Program

Two state farm leaders have called on rural citizens of the state to actively support the current campaign of the Governor's Traffic Safety Council to reduce traffic accidents.

Harry B. Caldwell, Master of the State Grange, and Fred Royster, president of the Brightbelt Tobacco Warehouse Association, both of whom are members of the Council's Executive Committee, said the problem is one that demands the wholehearted support of every farm family.

Statistics released by the two farm leaders show that 12 per cent of the 991 fatal accidents which took place in North Carolina last year involved farm operators.

"Certainly this is a tragic record," Caldwell said, "one that we can and should do something to correct. Most of these fatal accidents were preventable. They were the result of negligence on the part of some vehicle operator. Farm people must do their part to do away with this slaughter on our highways."

As a good example of group action to reduce traffic accidents, Caldwell noted the work done recently by a rural community in Randolph County. There he said every traffic hazard was carefully checked and marked as a result of a survey. Contacts were made with the State Highway Department and blinker lights were installed at dangerous intersections, traffic safety meetings were held with Highway Patrolmen as speakers, and other steps were taken to actively promote traffic safety in the community.

The farm leaders noted that the highways of North Carolina are the main streets of many rural communities. "We farm people use these highways in moving our produce to market and for pleasure purposes," Royster said. "It is important for our farm people to realize their obligation to their friends and neighbors in the use of these highways."

He suggested these specific ways in which farm people can aid in the safety effort: By using the side rather than the center of the highway in moving tractors and other farm machines from one place to another; by always stopping and looking both ways when entering a highway from a side road; by refraining from driving slowly along the highway looking at crops in the fields; by keeping shrubbery, brush, etc., at intersections cut back, so it will not obstruct a driver's view.

MUSK OX

Domestication of Musk Ox for farm use is being tested near Huntington Center, Vt., says the National Geographic Society. Three calves, two females and a bull, were brought down from Canada's Northwest Territories. When fully grown, they will tip scales at 800 pounds each and provide excellent meat. Their wool is even more highly prized. One mature ox may yield several times as much wool — light, fine, soft and nonshrinkable — as a sheep.

HARMONY REVIVAL

Revival services will begin Sunday night, July 10 at Harmony Baptist Church. The Rev. Colvin Thompson, pastor, will be assisted in the preaching by the Rev. Fred Stiles.
