Free Use Permits Given By National Forest Service Here

Free use permits are granted to local forest residents who live near national forest land, Ranger W. E. Howell said this week. Mr. Howell said these permits consist mostly of dead and down pine and hardwood, fuelwood and deal locust for fence posts.

This material must be used by the local resident for home or farm purposes, Mr. Howell said, and free use can be granted to any individual up to $20 in value during any one year.

During the fiscal year just ended the district ranger's office in

Veach Appointed To National Group

John B. Veach, Sr., of Bemis Hardwood Lumber Co., Robbinsville, has been appointed a member of the important United States Chamber of Commerce natural resources committee for 1955-56.

The committee, headed by Frank E. McCaslin, president of the Oregon Portland Cement Co., is made up of some 41 persons from all parts of the county.

The resources committee helps keep the chamber informed on development and trends affecting forestry, mining, oil and gas, water

Murphy issued 171 free permits and two free administrative use permits to churches. These permits totaled 450,000 board feet valued at $1,040.

LOWLY WORM

Biologists are largely mystified by the lowly ice worm, says the National Geographic Society. These wriggling true worms of the family Encyrtidae lie dark and threadlike on the ice and snows of the Olympic Peninsula of Washington State, each about a quarter-inch long. Still unanswered are resources and electric power. It also makes recommendations on policy matters relating to these industries.

these questions: Where do they come from? What do they eat? How do they function at such low temperatures? Why do they choose such a weird environment?
