MEMORIES
BY NORA COBB SPENCER
As the shadows fall at eventide,
And we know the day is o'er—
Memories come stealing softly in
Of by-gone days of yore.
We can hear the children's prattle and glee
See their school books cast aside
As they tell of exploits and adventures
And hear a baby's sigh as the mother hums a lullaby.
We recall joys and sadness,
Love and hate, laughter and tears,
Words of counsel, temptations off—
These things—memories of other years.
Our memories are made from the choice of youth—
When the young man questioned the Master
His choice was his "goods", foreboding disaster.
He was told, "Give to the poor".
When Jonah saw ships spreading their sails,
Did he not recall one stormy night
When he was a lone fugitive
From God's call to service and right?
Could Peter forget his denial?
Aye, as long as he lived
The memory could only be so-tened
By the Savior's grace to forgive.
Our joys and our sorrows,
Our disappointments, our gain
March before us in ready array—
As in after years we review them again.
Horses have been rapidly decreasing in North America and Western Europe in recent years, but show increases in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.
