Artificial Breeding

The introduction of frozen semen to North Carolina's artificial breeding program has resulted in rapid expansion in many counties, according to T. C. Blalock, dairy specialist for the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service.

Blalock estimate that North Carolina farmers bred 12,000 cows artificially during November, the first month in which frozen semen was used. This represents almost as many cows as were bred during the entire year of 1948, the first year the program operated.

P. W. Scott, Orange County artificial breeding technician, set a new record for North Carolina, and probably the entire South for the number of cows bred in a single month when he bred 718 first service cows in November. He also bred 140 second services and 42 cows for the third time—meaning Scott had a very busy month!

Other associations also reported large increases during November, Blalock says. Floyd Kidd, Curry County, reported 127 first services, a gain of almost 100 per cent over the same month last year. Carl Obenshain, Yadkin County, set a new record by breeding 400 new cows. Ralph Baugh, Wake County, set a new record for organization by breeding 426 cows, a 42 per cent gain over last year. Other counties in which 400 cows were bred artificially were Alamance, Buncombe, Guilford, Iredell and Union.

Blalock credits this rapid growth in the program largely to two factors: (1) frozen semen offers many advantages over the old system, including higher conception rates, from artificial breeding. "They're found that on the average they're the best cows they've ever milked and they want more like them," Blalock concludes.
