Will Scott Baptist Gets Old Train Bell

Steam Locomotives disappeared from the tracks of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad almost a year ago, but there is still visible—and audible—evidence of their existence in many an L & N served community.

Just recently the L. & N. donated six engine bells, removed from scrapped locomotives, to as many churches along its lines. This was a continuation of a practice inaugurated several years ago and in all, the L. & N. has now donated a total of 370 such engine bells to small on-line churches operating with limited budgets.

The Will Scott Baptist Church here was among the six recently receiving bells.

As practically all of its steam engines have now been scrapped, and all bells assigned, the railroad is forced to conclude its program of such donations.
