NOT RED SKINS

Although the aborigines of America generally are referred to as red Indians or members of the red race, the term is somewhat erroneous. Skin of the typical Indian is brown rather than red and very few adults are of the proverbial copper color.

NATIVE WOMAN RECEIVES BIBLE FROM DEVOTED ARMY MEMBER

Dedicated Army Distributes Bible In Many Tongues In Many Lands

Peruvian Indians high in the Andes, Ceylonese villagers, Japanese rice farmers, and transient construction workers along the St. Lawrence Seaway all are enjoying a common bond.

It is their participation in the 15-year-old Worldwide Bible Reading program, sponsored by the American Bible Society and similar groups in other countries.

The program is aimed at having millions of persons read the same Bible passages each day in a mass act of faith that makes a single Christian community of a large part of the world.

The participation of widely-scattered and diverse people in such a program is made possible by a unique distribution system employing a dedicated army of 5,000.

They are called colporteurs—a French word identifying porters who carry trays around their necks—and their job is to give away and to sell the scriptures on a door-to-door basis around the world.

Some are paid by the American Bible Society or one of its affiliated organizations. Some work part-time, but most perform their tasks without pay as a labor of devotion and conviction. They carry out their mission in ancient fabled cities and in remote, harsh areas where poverty is so absolute as to be indescribable.

The colporteurs represent a relatively modern means of Bible distribution even though the Bible itself has been a guiding influence over mankind's values and conduct since Christianity began.

For it was largely during the past century that the Bible was translated into a sufficient number of languages to make it comprehensible and available to most of the peoples on earth.

In the 1,900 years that the Bible has existed as a book, some part of it has been published in 1,127 languages and dialects. The entire Bible has been translated into 214 languages. When printing was invented 500 years ago the Bible existed in 33 tongues. From that time until Bible societies were organized early in the 1800s, the scriptures were translated and published in only 71 languages.

There remain more than 1,900 languages and dialects in which no part of the Bible has been published—a task equal to the one it has taken five centuries to accomplish.

As the scriptures are published, it is the colporteurs who put them into the hands of the people. They go about their work in the face of severe hardships—enmity from hostile governments, persecution from state-supported religious authorities, harassment from people who recognize that the Bible is an instrument of liberation.
